

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

A COMMENTARY like the present draws frankly from its predecessors, just as these in their turn used materials quarried by earlier scholars, whom they do not name on each occasion. The right to do this is won by conscientious effort in sifting previous collections and reproducing only what is trustworthy, apt, and instructive for the understanding of the text. If new illustrations or evidence can be added, that is so much to the good.

So far as I am aware, the solution I have given of the textual problem of  $\tau^{17}$ , the "shadow of turning," is strictly new. It is a matter of no consequence in itself, but acquires interest because it bears directly on the relation of the Sinaitic and Vatican manuscripts, and because Dr. Hort candidly recognised this reading of  $\aleph$  and B, as hitherto understood, to present a grave, although unique, obstacle to his and Dr. Westcott's theory.

To some other discussions, of the nature of detached notes, in which material is freshly or fully collected, I have ventured to call the reader's attention in the Table of Contents. It may also be not improper to remark that the account of extant ancient commentaries on James in Greek and Latin (pages 110-113) runs counter to some recent statements.

The explanation offered of "thou" and "I" in  $2^{18}$ , which seems to me to solve the problem of that passage, is not strictly new, but has been overlooked in most current works on the epistle. In the light of modern geographical knowledge the reference in  $5^7$  to "the early and latter rain" gains a greater importance than has generally been observed.

The summary of the epistle (pages 4*f.*) may make more clear and intelligible than I have been able to do elsewhere the measure of unity which the epistle shows, and the relation of its parts.

A marked defect of this commentary, although one not peculiar to it, is that its rabbinical illustrations ought to be fuller. The glaring technical inconsistencies in the mode of referring to such passages as are cited will betray at once that they are drawn from various secondary sources and not from original and systematic research. It would be a great service to New Testament scholars to provide them with a new and adequate set of Horae hebraicae, and nowhere is the need so great as in James and the Gospel of Matthew.

These two writings are sources from which a knowledge of primitive Palestinian Christianity can be drawn, and they represent a different line of development from that of the Hellenistic Christianity which finds expression in Luke, Paul, and John. The grounds of the distinction are other than those which the Tübingen School believed to have controlled early Christian history, but they are no less clear or far-reaching. A just understanding of these tendencies requires a sound view not only of the origin and meaning of the Epistle of James, but of its history in the church. And here the critical question is that of the Shepherd of Hermas. The view stated below that Hermas betrays no knowledge of James and is not dependent on him was forced on me, I am glad to say, by the study of the facts, against a previous prejudice and without at first recognising where it led; but it is in truth the key to the history. If Hermas really read the Epistle of James so often that he knew by heart its most incidental phrases, now working them into his own writing and again making them the text for long expansions, the place of the epistle in early Christianity becomes an insoluble riddle.

The notes on textual criticism in the commentary are intended to treat chiefly those selected variants which make a difference in the sense; the materials employed do not ordinarily go beyond the apparatus of Tischendorf. I hope later to treat the criticism and history of the text of James in the light of all the evidence, including as nearly as may be the whole body of extant minuscule Greek manuscripts.

To many friends who have helped me in countless ways and from great stores of thought and knowledge I would gratefully express the obligation that I owe them.

INTRODUCTION.

I. THE EPISTLE.

The Epistle of James is a religious and moral tract having the form, but only the form, of a letter. It contains counsels and reflections on a variety of topics relating to personal character and right conduct, but attains a certain unity from the writer's own traits of sincerity, good sense, and piety, which are manifest in every paragraph. The epistle has been assigned to many dates and several places of origin, and is held by many to be a genuine writing of James the Lord's brother; but it is probably the pseudonymous production of a Christian of Jewish origin, living in Palestine in the last quarter of the first century or the first quarter of the second. The precise limits of the period within which it was written cannot be determined.

The epistle reflects the conditions of Jewish life in Palestine, and almost all the ideas have their roots in Jewish thought, but in much of the language, style, and mode of expression generally, and in some of the ideas, Hellenistic influences are unmistakable and strong. The interweaving of the two strains contributes much to the freshness and effectiveness of the epistle as a hortatory essay.

Our first certain knowledge of the book is from two sources of about the same date; namely, Origen (c. 185-c. 254) and the pseudo-clementine Epistles to Virgins, written in Palestine in Greek in the early decades of the third century. After Origen the Epistle of James seems soon to have become widely accepted in the Greek church as a part of the N. T. In the West the translation into Latin, made before 350, gives the earliest evidence of acquaintance with the epistle by Latin-speaking Christians. In Syria the Greek original was known as early as the latter half of the fourth century, and it was first translated into Syriac (as a part of the Peshitto) in the early part of the fifth.

§ 1. THE PURPOSE AND CONTENTS OF THE EPISTLE.

(a) Purpose.

The writer of the Epistle of James has in mind in his counsels the general needs of such Christians as he is acquainted with or of whose existence he is aware. The epistle does not treat of the special concerns of any particular church nor owe its origin to any specific occasion. The author addresses any Christians into whose hands his work may fall and touches upon subjects of wide and general interest. It cannot be said that the epistle has any more specific "purpose" than the general aim of edification. In the selection of topics the writer was governed partly by his own special interests at the moment, partly by what he drew from his own experience of the life about him as to the needs of human nature in general. Doubtless here, as always, the impulse to expression arose from the consciousness of having something to say which by its freshness either of form or substance would interest readers and strike home. There is no attempt in the epistle to give a full or systematic account of the author's ideas on any subject.

(b) Contents.

Like the ancient Wisdom-literature of the Hebrews, with which (in spite of entire difference of style) the writer probably shows some familiarity, much of the epistle is in aphoristic form. Such sentences, having their meaning complete in themselves, gain comparatively little illumination from the context; they are the well-rounded and compact results of whole trains of previous thought, and are successful in suggesting these to the reader's mind. In trying to interpret by a paraphrase, or to show the connection of ideas, it is difficult to avoid ascribing to the writer what he has not said, and elaborating thoughts hinted at, rather than fairly implied, by the text (cf. the full and instructive Paraphrases of Erasmus, and the attempts to summarise the epistle found in the commentaries and the books on Introduction).

The aphorisms are not generally isolated, but are gathered in paragraphs; and these often have unity and show connection and progress of thought. The paragraphs are grouped loosely under more or less definite points of view, and in chs. 2 and 4<sup>1-5</sup> we find an approach to the fuller discussion of a topic from various sides. In some instances the connection between smaller divisions is made by the skilful use of the same or a similar word at the close of one sentence and the opening of the next (thus, 1<sup>11</sup>. χαίρειν, χαράν; 1<sup>11</sup>. λειπόμενοι, λείπεται; 1<sup>12</sup>. πειρασμόν, πειραζόμενος; 1<sup>21</sup>. λόγον, λόγου; 5<sup>16</sup>. προσεύχεσθε, δέσεις; cf. the connection made by 3<sup>14-18</sup> between the divergent subjects of chs. 3 and 4). It is noteworthy that in the later chapters, where there is more continuity in the flow of thought, this method of "capping" sentences rarely occurs.

Beneath the whole epistle plainly lie two pervading and strongly felt principles: (1) the hatred of sham of every kind; (2) the conviction that God and the world are incompatible as objects of men's allegiance. Neither of these principles could serve as a title to the tract, but they bind its somewhat miscellaneous contents together in a sort of unity.

These general characteristics recall the spirit of the Hellenistic diatribes, among which the Epistle of James seems to find its fittest literary classification. There, as here, the aim to pierce through appearance and pretense to reality is a leading motive, and in the first two chapters of James we read what Christian earnestness thought it worth while to say on this favourite theme of the sometimes superficial or possibly flippant, but commonly serious even if unconventional, Greek popular street preacher;* while James's discussion, in his last two chapters, of the two incompatible aims of human striving also treats a familiar topic of these moralists.†

† Wendland, op. cit., p. 85; A. Bonhöffer, Epiktet und das Neue Testament (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, x), 1911, pp. 351 f.

These contacts make more intelligible the structure of the epistle. Familiarity with these great discussions, which had been given in public for centuries, would cause contemporary readers to see fitness in a series of topics which to us seem incongruous, to recognise the naturalness of transitions which strike us as awkward and abrupt, and to detect a latent unity which for us is obscured by the writer's habit of making no introductory announcement of his successive themes. It must, however, be emphasised that the writer's method is hortatory, not expository (about 60 imperatives occur in the 108 verses); his goal is nowhere so definitely formulated in his mind as to forbid a swift and unexpected leap to inculcate some important object of Christian endeavour (so in ch. 5). In such cases we cannot assume completely to trace the real sequence of his thought.

The following summary of the epistle is an attempt to indicate for the several larger divisions the point of view which may have led to the grouping of the paragraphs.

- (a) 1<sup>2-4</sup>. The real nature of trouble is as an aid to a well-rounded character.
- (b) 1<sup>5-8</sup>. Real prayer requires unwavering faith.
- (c) 1<sup>9-11</sup>. Poverty is real wealth.
- (d) 1<sup>12</sup>. The endurance of trouble brings the crown of life.
- (e) 1<sup>13-18</sup>. The real cause of sin is not temptation sent by God, but lies within yourself.

- (f) 1<sup>19-25</sup>. Hearing is indeed better than talking, but the real response to the word of God is not to listen only but to obey.
- (g) 1<sup>26-27</sup>. Real worship is inconsistent with reckless speech; the best worship is kindly service and inner purity.

- (h) 2<sup>1-7</sup>. To court the rich and neglect the poor in the house of worship reverses real values.
- (i) 2<sup>8-12</sup>. For such conduct it is a futile excuse to urge that the law of love requires it.
- (j) 2<sup>14-16</sup>. Equally futile is it to pretend in excuse that the possession of faith dispenses from works.

II. 3<sup>1-12</sup>. ON THE TEACHER'S CALLING.

- (a) 3<sup>1-12</sup>. Against ambition to be teachers. The teacher is under heavier responsibility than others; yet the tongue (the teacher's organ) is as powerful as the little rudder in a great ship, as dangerous as a little fire in a great forest, and is untamable.
- (b) 3<sup>12-18</sup>. The true wise man's wisdom must be meek and peaceable; such wisdom alone comes from above, and only peaceable righteousness receives the divine reward.

III. 4<sup>1-5</sup><sup>20</sup>. WORLDLINESS AND THE CHRISTIAN CONDUCT OF LIFE CONTRASTED.

- (a) 4<sup>1-12</sup>. The cause of the crying evils of life is the pursuit of pleasure, an aim which is in direct rivalry with God and abhorrent to him.
- (b) 4<sup>12-17</sup>. The practical neglect of God seen in the trader's presumptuous confidence in himself; and the futility of it.
- (c) 5<sup>1-6</sup>. The practical neglect of God seen in the cruelty and luxury of the rich; and the appalling issue which awaits it.

(2) 5<sup>7-20</sup>. Counsels for the Christian conduct of life.

- (d) 5<sup>7-11</sup>. Constancy and forbearance; and their reward.
- (e) 5<sup>12-18</sup>. The religious expression of strong emotion; and the efficacy of prayer.
- (f) 5<sup>19, 20</sup>. The privilege of service to the erring.

§ 2. THE LITERARY TYPE OF THE EPISTLE OF JAMES.*

The character of James as an epistle is given it solely by 1<sup>1</sup>, which (see note ad loc.) has the conventional form usual in the opening sentence of a Greek letter. But the address (however interpreted) "to the people of God, in their dispersion" (ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ) implies that what follows is a literary tract intended for any Christian into whose hands it may fall, not a proper letter sent to a definite individual or even to a definite group of persons.

With this corresponds the epistle itself. The author's treatment of his themes is plainly governed by the conditions of life with which he is familiar, but nothing implies any definite or restricted circle within the Christian church as the persons to whom the letter is sent. The terms used are in part drawn from local conditions, but the exhortations themselves could apply anywhere where there were Christians. As a letter proper would be a substitute for a conversation, so such an epistle as this corresponds to a public address prepared for delivery to an indefinite number of audiences and equally suitable for all of them. A letter proper is written to be sent to the person or persons addressed. A tract is, in more or less formal fashion, published. The same piece of writing might, indeed, be in itself fit for either use; in that case the author's purpose could be learned only from the form of the epistolary address. But in the present instance neither contents nor address indicates that the letter was ever intended to be sent to any specific church or churches.

On the history of the epistolary form in classical and Christian literature, see R. Hirzel, Der Dialog, 1895, esp. i, pp. 300-308, 352-358, ii, p. 8; H. Peter, Der Brief in der römischen Litteratur (Abhandlungen der phil.-hist. Classe der Kgl. Sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, xx), 1901; K. Dziatzko, art. "Brief," in Pauly-Wissowa, RE, 1899; A. Deissmann, Bibelstudien, 1895 (Eng. transl. 1901), art. "Epistolary Literature," in EB; H. Jordan, Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur, 1911.

* C. F. G. Heinrici, Der literarische Charakter der neutestamentlichen Schriften, 1908, brings out many noteworthy points of view with regard to the various aspects of these questions, and was one of the first in recent times to call attention to their importance.

The Epistle as a form of literature, in distinction from its use as the convenient instrument of personal intercourse, seems to have its roots in the Greek literary history of the fourth and third centuries before Christ. Eminent men of a still earlier period had written letters, often long and weighty, and these had sometimes been collected. Such were those of Isocrates, of which some genuine representatives may perhaps be included in the extant collection bearing his name. Especially Aristotle, †322 B.C., wrote letters, and his tracts of counsel to Alexander and to Themison, King of Cyprus, gained by virtue of their personal dedication something of the character of letters. Epicurus, †270 B.C., sought to strengthen the fellowship of his disciples by writing letters, of some of which the addresses at least are known to us (πρὸς τοὺς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ φίλους, πρὸς τοὺς ἐν Ἀσίᾳ φίλους, πρὸς τοὺς ἐν Λαμψάκῳ φίλους, πρὸς τοὺς ἐν Μυτιλήνῃ φιλοσόφους),* and the disciples followed the master's example. Many letters of this type were by their nature of interest to others than the persons addressed, and when collected and more widely circulated became works of literature.

In the same direction led the custom of dedicating books to individuals and so giving the whole book in some sense the character of an epistle.†

The result of all this was that the epistle became a usual form for a treatise, taking a place like that held by the dialogue. The transition corresponded to the changed times and the expansion of Hellenism. Once all higher culture had been concentrated at Athens, and a group there gathered for grave conversation presented the normal relation of author and audience which the book affected to record and perpetuate. Now educated men were diffused in countless centres throughout a widely extended world of Greek civilisation, and the direct method of address was, naturally, by a letter.‡ In the Hellenistic period all the world wrote letters, and many of them were intended for publication. Philosophers (especially the Epicureans and Peripatetics), moralists, rhetoricians, men of science, used this form for their essays, and we hear of epistles on topics medical, mathematical, grammatical, antiquarian, and even, perhaps, amusing. Literary letters of consolation and exhortation "gradually gained the position held by printed sermons and books of practical edification among modern Christians." *

The rhetorical writers found it necessary to occupy themselves with the principles and rules of this epistolography, and discussed the nature of an epistle and the style proper to it. From this period proceed various treatises on the art of letter-writing,† with their classification of types of epistles (twenty-two kinds are given, later increased to forty-one), on which later works were based.

The Romans, who constituted a part of this Hellenistic world, excelled in the epistolary form of composition, and became "the classic nation for the letter as the Greeks are for the dialogue."‡ Varro, Cicero, Horace, Seneca are the great names of a vast epistolary literature to which moralists, philologists, jurists, physicians made their contributions, and in which it is often hard to know whether a given letter carefully written on a serious subject was originally intended for publication or only for the person addressed.

From an early time pseudonymous letters were written, with the name not of the real author but of another—usually some famous leader of thought. When Menippus wrote letters of the gods addressed to the Epicureans,§ no one was deceived; in other instances the question of whether or not the author desired to deceive the public is less easy to answer. But in the dialogues of Plato the name of Socrates is used with entire freedom for the exposition of Plato's own ideas, and a similar use of a great name in "the half of a dialogue" (to quote an ancient writer's description of a letter||) was natural and equally innocent. Probably, too, the habit of free composition of letters, as well as speeches, incidentally to historical narratives tended to promote the pseudonymous composition of independent examples of both forms. Teachers of rhetoric composed model letters, appropriate to historical characters in assumed situations, and gave out such problems for their pupils' exercise in the epistolary art. A large proportion of the many hundred letters assembled in the great collection of R. Hercher, Epistolographi græci, Paris, 1873, are deemed to be such rhetorical models or pupils' exercises. But, whatever the causes, pseudonymous epistles became common.

Among the Jews of the Hellenistic age, as would be expected, literary epistles were written. Such were the Letter of Aristæas, the Epistle of Jeremy which forms ch. 6 of the Book of Baruch in the Apocrypha, and the Epistle of Baruch to the Nine and a Half Tribes appended to the Apocalypse of Baruch.* All these are serious, but pseudonymous, writings. It is possible that certain of the letters bearing the name of Heraclitus and of Diogenes were of Jewish origin.†

In the Christian church letters as literary works, not merely as private communications, were produced almost from the start. To name no other examples, the epistles of Paul to the Romans and the Ephesians were surely not intended to be read but once, or by one small group of Christians only; the Pastoral Epistles owe their origin to the epistolary tradition; and such a work as the (First) Epistle of Clement of Rome can hardly have been without a larger purpose than to edify the Corinthians to whom it is addressed. The custom of the time is illustrated in the name "Second Epistle of Clement of Rome," early assigned to an anonymous homily, as well as in the pseudonymous Epistle of Barnabas and Second Epistle of Peter, and in the anonymous Epistle to Diognetus. With the further development of the church, Christian epistolary writings—both personal letters and literary works, both genuine and pseudonymous—multiplied rapidly, and many have been preserved.‡

The epistolary form which James has was thus altogether natural and appropriate for a tract, and is fully accounted for by the literary custom of the time without the necessity of supposing either a real epistolary aim on the part of the author or the addition by a later and inept hand of an alien epistolary preface.* But it throws no light on the actual literary relationships of the document itself, which shows in its contents nothing whatever of the specific character of a letter.

All the more striking is the abundant illustration which the Epistle of James receives from both the manner and the substance of Hellenistic popular moral addresses, or Diatribes. At least since the time of Socrates, who was at once the revered head of a circle of disciples and a public disputant ready to debate with, confute, and instruct every chance comer, Greek and Hellenistic cities everywhere must have known the public preacher of philosophy and morals as a familiar figure of the street and market-place. In the early fourth century B.C., Diogenes lived at Athens; and his followers (called Cynics from their master's well-earned nickname of "The Dog") developed their ethical and social protest against the fetters of convention into a well-marked type of popular doctrine. This original Cynicism, united, as the predominant factor, with other more cultivated and rhetorical influences to produce Bion of Borysthenes (c. 280 B.C.), a pungent sermoniser of whose utterances a fortunate chance has preserved written record, quoted in the fragments of his otherwise unimportant follower Teles (c. 230 B.C.). Later generations (cf. Horace, Epist. ii, 2, l. 60) looked back to Bion as the chief representative, if not the founder, of the style, and the fragments make it evident that an apt form for this preaching had already been created. In the following centuries it is certain that others besides Cynics adopted the same methods, and that the style of the early preachers was perpetuated by a long series of inconspicuous workers; but whatever literary precipitate in written form their discourses may once have had perished in ancient times. In those days, as now, popular moral tracts, although undoubtedly abundant, were generally commonplace and ephemeral. Our knowledge has to be drawn chiefly from later representatives of the type.*

In Rome under the empire this popular preaching associated itself closely with literary training, and produced, or deeply influenced, works which have survived. From the common characteristics of these later writers and their close resemblance to the meagre remains of earlier times, it is evident that the type early matured its noteworthy traits of popular effectiveness and retained them for centuries without substantial alteration. Stoic philosophy and morals had come to the front as the chief higher influence on the masses, and abundantly used this apt instrument. In Seneca and Epictetus the influence of the popular diatribe is at its height. "The key-note, the most striking colour, of the whole body of writing of the philosopher Seneca is the diatribe-style";† and the discourses of Epictetus, though spoken to a select circle of personal pupils, are cast in the style of the diatribe. How widely this preaching had pervaded ancient life may be observed from the traces of its large influence in the satires of Horace, Persius, Juvenal, in the orations of Dio of Prusa, the essays of Plutarch, and the treatises of the Jew Philo, as well as in the reports of the utterances of Musonius and other less well-known personages of the same period. Paul at Athens (although not in the synagogues of the Hellenistic cities) must have presented himself to his hearers as just such a preacher as those to whose diatribes they were accustomed to listen: and such must have been very generally the case with the early Christian missionaries. It is not strange that the diatribe had a profound and far-reaching effect on the forms of Christian literature for centuries,* that its influence is clearly traceable in the epistles of Paul, and that it serves to explain much, both of the form and the content, of the Epistle of James.

To the most characteristic traits of the style of the diatribe belong the truncated dialogue with an imaginary interlocutor (often introduced by ἀλλ' ἐρεῖ τις, ἀλλ' ἐροῦνται, ἐροῦντ' ἂν ἡμᾶς, or the simple φησί) and the brief question and answer (e. g. Teles, p. 10, lines 6 ff.: γέρων γέγονας; μὴ ζήτει τὰ τοῦ νεοῦ. ἀσθενῆς πάλιν; μὴ ζήτει τὰ τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ . . . ἀπορος πάλιν γεγονας; μὴ ζήτει τὴν τοῦ εὐπόρου δαίταν). Good instances of both are found in Jas. 2<sup>18</sup> f. and Jas. 5<sup>13</sup> f. These traits serve well to illustrate the aim of immediate impression, appropriate to popular hortatory address, which has largely controlled the formation of this literary type.

On the style of the diatribe, see R. Bultmann, Der Stil der paulinischen Predigt und die kynisch-stoische Diatribe, 1910, where will be found a very full collection of detailed illustrations of the characteristics of these writings drawn from Teles, Musonius, Dio of Prusa, Epictetus, Seneca, and other writers, together with references to the literature on the subject. A brief but good statement is that of Heinrich, Der literarische Charakter der neutestamentlichen Schriften, 1908, pp. 74 f.

Origen, Contra Celsum, vi, 2, points out the effectiveness of this popular and hortatory quality in Epictetus's style as compared with Plato: καὶ εἰ χρή γε τοιμήσαντα εἰπεῖν, ὀλίγους μὲν ὤνησεν, εἰ γε ὤνησεν, ἢ περικαλλῆς καὶ ἐπιτετηθευμένη Πλάτωνος καὶ τῶν παρακλητικῶς φρασάντων λέξις· πλείονας δὲ ἢ τῶν εὐτελέστερον ἅμα καὶ πραγματικῶς καὶ ἰστοχασμένως τῶν πολλῶν [i. e. in a plain, practical, and popular style] διδασκάντων καὶ γραψάντων. Ἔστι γοῦν ἰδεῖν τὸν μὲν Πλάτωνα ἐν χερσὶ τῶν δοκούντων εἶναι φιλολόγων μόνον, τὸν δὲ Ἐπίκτητον καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν τυχόντων καὶ ροπήν πρὸς τὸ ὠφελεῖσθαι ἔχόντων θαυμαζόμενον, αἰσθομένων τῆς ἀπὸ τῶν λόγων αὐτοῦ βελτιώσεως.

Of the other habitual phrases and modes of expression which give a well-marked and easily recognisable form to the diatribe, very many are observable in James. Thus, such formulas as μὴ πλανᾶσθε (1<sup>18</sup>), θέλεις δὲ γινῶναι (2<sup>20</sup>), βλέπεις (2<sup>22</sup>), ὁρᾶτε (2<sup>24</sup>), ἴστε (1<sup>19</sup>), τί ὄφελος (2<sup>14</sup>, 16), οὐ χροή to introduce a conclusion (3<sup>10</sup>), διὸ λέγει with a quotation (4<sup>6</sup>), ἰδοὺ (3<sup>4</sup>, 5<sup>4</sup>, 7, 9, 11), all have either exact or substantial parallels in the recurrent phrases of this literature. The transitions are often made in the same way as with the Greek sermonisers—by raising an objection (2<sup>8</sup>), by a question (2<sup>14</sup> 4<sup>1</sup> 5<sup>12</sup>), by ἄγε (4<sup>13</sup> 5<sup>1</sup>). The imperatives are not only numerous (nearly sixty times in the 108 verses), but, as in the diatribes, are sometimes ironical (5<sup>1</sup>, perhaps 4<sup>8</sup>). Rhetorical questions (e. g. 2<sup>4</sup>, 5, 14-16 3<sup>11</sup> f. 4<sup>1</sup> f.) are numerous, and 4<sup>1</sup> f. shows the characteristic form of statement by “catechism-like” question and answer. The apostrophe to the traders and the rich (4<sup>12</sup>-5<sup>6</sup>) is quite in the style of the diatribe, and does not in the least imply that the persons addressed were expected to be among the readers of the tract. Even personifications are not lacking (1<sup>18</sup> 2<sup>12</sup> 4<sup>1</sup> 5<sup>3</sup> f.), although they are less elaborate than in the Greek sermons, where they constitute a favourite ornament. Figures are abundant in all kinds of popular address, but in those of James there is direct resemblance to the diatribes. Some comparisons are conventional, traceable for centuries previous in Greek writers (especially, with others, the rudder, the bridle, the forest fire, in 3<sup>3-6</sup>); as in the diatribes, many are drawn from the works of nature, others from the common life of man (1<sup>28</sup> 2<sup>15</sup> 5<sup>7</sup>), and they are sometimes double or with repetition (3<sup>3-6</sup>, 10-12). Examples from famous individuals are found here, too (Abraham, Rahab, Job, Elijah), and they are, as with the Greek preachers,* stock instances, well-known representatives of the qualities mentioned.

In general the Greek preachers were well aware that in their diatribes they were awakening sinners and inculcating familiar but neglected principles, not engaged in investigating truth or in carrying thought further to the conquest of the unknown.

* See E. Weber, “De Dione Chrysostomo Cynicorum sectatore,” in Leipziger Studien, x, 1887, pp. 227 ff.

Not originality but impressiveness was what they aimed at. The argument is from what the readers already know and ought to feel. They appeal to analogy (cf. Jas. 2<sup>14-17</sup>), to experience (cf. 3<sup>6</sup> 4<sup>1-3</sup>), and to common sense (cf. Jas. passim). Harsh address to the reader is not absent in James, and ὁ ἄνθρωπε κενέ (2<sup>30</sup>), μοιχαλίδες (4<sup>4</sup>) are not unlike the ὦ ταλαίπωρε, μωρέ, stulte, of the diatribe. The writers of diatribes were fond of quotations from poets and sages, but these were used not for proof of the doctrine but incidentally, and often for ornament of the discourse. So is it usually with James (1<sup>11</sup>, 1<sup>17</sup> 4<sup>6</sup> 5<sup>11</sup>, 30 for ornament; 2<sup>8</sup> to state an inadequate excuse, which is overruled), in contrast to the frequent use in Paul and Matthew of the O. T. for proof.

Other traits of style show resemblance. As in the diatribes, there is a general controlling motive in the discussion, but no firm and logically disposed structure giving a strict unity to the whole, and no trace of the conventional arrangement recommended by the elegant rhetoricians. The method of framing the sections in by a general statement at opening and close is to be seen in James at 1<sup>2-12</sup>, 12-26 2<sup>17-26</sup> 3<sup>11-12</sup>, 12-13. The characteristic methods of concluding a section are found: by a sharp antithesis, 1<sup>26</sup> 2<sup>12</sup>, 26 3<sup>15-18</sup> 4<sup>12</sup>; by a question, 4<sup>12</sup> 5<sup>6</sup>; by a quotation, 5<sup>30</sup>; by οὐ χρή, 3<sup>10</sup>. A key-word often runs through a passage, or is repeated so as to give a sense of reference back; so πειρασμός 1<sup>2-14</sup>, σοφία 3<sup>12-18</sup>, ξῆλος 3<sup>12-4<sup>2</sup></sup>, χαλιναγωγεῖν γλῶσσαν 1<sup>26</sup> 3<sup>2</sup>, λόγος 1<sup>18-23</sup>, νόμος ἐλευθερίας 1<sup>25</sup> 2<sup>12</sup>, κρίνειν 4<sup>11</sup>, 12.

Like a diatribe, the epistle begins with a paradox (1<sup>2</sup>) and contains others (1<sup>10</sup> 2<sup>5</sup>). The general principle that popular estimates of values are false and must be reversed underlies James as it does the Greek sermons. Wherein true wealth consists was a favourite subject of their exposition and prompted many paradoxical turns; in James it has given rise to a passage not without its difficulties (1<sup>10-12</sup>). Irony is not lacking (2<sup>14-19</sup> 5<sup>1-9</sup>), though it is of the serious, never of the flippant, order.

Of course, any one of these traits of language, style, and mode of thought could be paralleled from other types of literature. What is significant and conclusive is the combination in these few pages of James of so many of the most striking features of a specific literary type familiar in the contemporary Hellenistic world. The inference from details is confirmed by the general tone and character of the whole epistle—direct, plain, earnest, sensible—lively, even on occasion descriptive and dramatic (cf. 2<sup>1a</sup>.), full of illustration and concrete application—not aiming at profundity of speculation, popular and hortatory throughout.

The traits referred to in the above paragraphs are many of them observable in the epistles of Paul, who betrays large influence from the style of the diatribe. No writing of Paul's, however, comes so close to the true type of this form of literature as does the Epistle of James. Paul, a many-sided thinker, also follows other, very different and not always readily identifiable, models, and in his general tone displays far more passion and far more boldness of thought than the admirable, but quiet, simple, and somewhat limited, writer of our epistle. For the resemblances and differences between Paul and the diatribe, see Bultmann, op. cit. pp. 64-107.

It is, to be sure, true that some differences from the diatribes preserved and known to us can be observed in James, and in view of the strong and pervading resemblance these are of significance. They show how the specific character of this Christian Jew led him to develop the type of these tracts. The most striking difference is the greater seriousness and restraint of tone. Nothing in James could entitle it to be described as σπουδαιογέλοιον. The characteristic diatribe had more of the laugh, and it was usually a bitterer laugh than would have been possible to the high-minded but friendly preacher who here speaks to us. The diatribes were abundantly humorous, often trivial, and sometimes verged on the coarse. Again, James, as a Christian preacher, addresses his readers as "brethren," "beloved brethren," whereas the Greek preacher thought of individuals, addressed them in the singular, and was not bound to them either by love or by the bond of a common brotherhood. The habit of scolding the audience and the world at large and of ridicule and abuse in general was a peculiarly vivid and permanent trait of the Cynic diatribe.* James shows a certain contact with it in his serious warning (4<sup>1-12</sup>) and in his apostrophes (4<sup>12-5</sup>), but his usual tone is mild, and one might almost suspect that the injunctions to emphasise the gentle nature of true wisdom (3<sup>13 ff.</sup>) were aimed in direct condemnation of the Cynic's rough and censorious habit. In view of Jas. 5<sup>12</sup>, it is worth notice that for the frequent oaths, which give a picturesque, if slightly vulgar, force to the language of the diatribes, we have here no substitute.

Again, the comparisons used by James are more limited in range than those with which the diatribes are crowded. His seem conventional and, with few exceptions, slight, in comparison with the fulness with which every side of human life—clean and dirty—is mirrored in the comparisons of the Greeks. In particular, the figures from ways and customs of organised society—the arena, the theatre, the market-place, war, handicrafts—and from the practises of Greek religion are lacking. He seems to belong to a simpler world—although he is not ignorant of a wider reach beyond his own daily round. In ideas James, of course, breathed a different atmosphere. Of the familiar Cynic and Stoic commonplaces the chief one that appears is the representation of poverty as exaltation and wealth as debasement, while the opening exposition of the moral uses of trouble has a certain similarity to Greek popular philosophy. But the true nature of freedom, the paradox that death is life, the doctrine that sin is ignorance, the right apprehension of exile, of the feelings, the general principle that evils are good—these are not James's topics.

The resemblance of James to the diatribes is made even more convincing by noting the contrast which the epistle shows in style and method to the Jewish Wisdom-literature, with which it is often classed, and with which, in the deeper roots of our writer's thought, he has much closer kinship than with the Hellenistic diatribe. In the Book of Proverbs endless contrasted sentences (in themselves clever and interesting, if only they were not so many) may well be found less tedious in the original poetry, whose rhythm finds its proper effect in this trick of parallelism; but how unlike to the simple but varied prose of James I. And the literary type assumed by Proverbs, with its constant address to "my son" and its imagined sage handing down ancient wisdom, is utterly different from that of James's exhortation to his audience of "beloved brethren." Jas. 1<sup>10</sup> might possibly seem of the type of Proverbs, and 4<sup>7, 10</sup> barely suggest it, but hardly another sentence will recall the haunting distich of the Hebrew book. Equally distant from James are the shrewd practical maxims and occasional real poetry of Ecclesiasticus. That book is too much written in parallels to suggest James, and its thinking is of a wholly different nature,* as may be seen by comparing either its prudential wisdom or its poetical feeling for Wisdom with what James has to say, for instance, in 3<sup>12-18</sup>. The maxims in Tobit, ch. 4, plainly translated from a Semitic poetical original, call to mind neither the diatribe nor James. And the Book of Wisdom, with its higher flights of poetry and more Hellenistic and modern character, does not often much remind us of James, although he may have read it and 5<sup>6-15</sup> can in some respects be compared with Jas. 3, while Wisd. 7<sup>22 f.</sup> (an especially unsemitic passage) recalls Jas. 3<sup>15-17</sup>. In the Wisdom-literature, as a literary type, it is impossible to place James. The epistle is, rather, a diatribe, showing how that highly serviceable type, now well known to us, could be handled by a Jewish Christian, who used what he knew of the Greek preacher's sermons not to gain his ideas from them but for suggestions of effective ways of putting his own Christian and Jewish teaching.

The diatribe was highly significant for Christian preaching, e. g. Chrysostom, Hom. in Joh. iii, 3, but it must not be forgotten that in fundamental ideas the Christians' connection with Jewish thinking was far closer than with the Hellenistic moralism. Wilamowitz-Moellendorf tends to overlook this in his striking discussion of Teles in Antigonos von Karystos (Philologische Untersuchungen, iv), 1881, pp. 313 ff., in which he opposes the notion of J. Freudenthal that the "sacred eloquence of the Jews" was the immediate parent of Christian homiletics. See the important discussion by J. Freudenthal, Die Flavius Josephus beigelegte Schrift Ueber die Herrschaft der Vernunft (IV Makkabäerbuch), Breslau, 1869.

A third type of Hellenistic literature, besides the epistle and the diatribe, might suggest itself as a possible source for the literary character of James. The Protrepticus, or parenetic tract, was a form of hortatory writing of which the earliest examples are the two exhortations of Isocrates, Ad Nicoclem and Nicoles. More ethical and less political is the παραινέσις, or præceptio, of Pseudo-Isocrates, Ad Demonicum, also a product of the fourth century B.C. These tracts are largely composed of separate apothegms, many of these being widely current and often-repeated practical maxims, but both in form and spirit they are as far removed from the Epistle of James as Lord Chesterfield's Letters Written to His Son are from a sermon of John Wesley. They are later prose representatives of the poetical tradition of gnomic literature seen in Theognis and in the now lost Phocylides, and are the precursors of the useful florilegia and gnomic collections of a later time. This character is expressly intimated by Isocrates, Ad Nicoclem, 40 f., when he declares the art of this kind of composition to lie in skilful selection of the fine thoughts of others. Later instances of the protrepticus seem to have been numerous. The earlier ones were often tracts recommending and inviting to the rhetorician's studies and art. The moralists and philosophers, too, including Posidonius, wrote works of this kind, now mostly lost, which exerted considerable influence. The Protrepticus of Aristotle was a defense of the significance of philosophy for life. Galen wrote a protrepticus to the science and practise of medicine. The type ran out at last into the "epideictic" literature of mere display. See P. Hartlich, "De exhortationum a Græcis Romanisque scriptarum historia et indole," in Leipziger Studien, xi, 1889, pp. 209-333; T. C. Burgess, Epideictic Literature (Studies in Classical Philology, vol. iii), Chicago, 1902, pp. 229 ff. note 2; P. Wendland, Anaximenes von Lampsakos, 1905; F. Blass, Attische Beredsamkeit, 1892, ii, pp. 111, 271 ff.

§ 3. LITERARY RELATIONSHIPS.

(a) The relation of the Epistle of James to the Wisdom-literature of the O. T. has already been referred to, and it has been pointed out that in literary type and style the epistle breathes a different atmosphere. Some of the ideas, however, of Proverbs, Ecclesiasticus, and Wisdom are found repeated in

James. It is not unlikely that the writer was familiar with these books, and a full list of the parallels is to be found in Mayor, Epistle of St. James, ch. 4. But direct influence on the language of James cannot be affirmed with any confidence, except in the case of Proverbs, from which (Prov. 3<sup>34</sup>) a quotation is made in Jas. 4<sup>6</sup>. Some of the more striking parallels are to be found in Prov. 11<sup>30</sup> ("the fruit of righteousness," cf. Jas. 3<sup>18</sup>), 19<sup>3</sup> (against blaming God, cf. Jas. 1<sup>13</sup>), 27<sup>1</sup> ("boast not of the things of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what the morrow will bring forth," cf. Jas. 4<sup>13-16</sup>), 17<sup>3</sup> 27<sup>21</sup> (testing human qualities, cf. Jas. 1<sup>3</sup>), 29<sup>30</sup> ("a man that is swift in his words," cf. Jas. 1<sup>19</sup>).

The Wisdom of Jesus Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus, offers better parallels, but it is doubtful whether the common view that James unquestionably used it can be maintained.* Many topics referred to by James appear in it; thus, the dangers proceeding from the tongue (Ecclus. 19<sup>6-12</sup> 20<sup>5-8</sup>, 18-20 22<sup>27</sup> 28<sup>12-16</sup> 35 [32] 7-9), wisdom the gift of God (1<sup>1-10</sup>), prayer with a divided heart (1<sup>27</sup>), pride (10<sup>7-18</sup>), the uncertainty of life (10<sup>10</sup> 11<sup>16</sup>, 17), blaming God (15<sup>11-20</sup>), man as made in God's image and ruling over the beasts (17<sup>31</sup>), the eclipse of the sun and the changes of the moon (17<sup>21</sup> 27<sup>11</sup>). Other passages remind us of the conditions implied in James; so 4<sup>10</sup>, the widow and orphan; 7<sup>25</sup>, visiting the sick; 13<sup>19</sup>, oppression of the poor by the rich; 18<sup>18</sup>, on grudging beneficence; 38<sup>9</sup>, prayer and confession by the sick. But these may attest a general similarity in the religious and intellectual environment rather than proper literary dependence, although the author of James may well have read Ecclesiasticus. The parallels from the Wisdom of Solomon are less striking. The most noteworthy are 1<sup>11</sup> (cf. Jas. 4<sup>11</sup> 5<sup>9</sup>); 2<sup>4</sup> (cf. Jas. 4<sup>14</sup>); 2<sup>10-20</sup>, the oppression of the poor; 3<sup>4-6</sup>, tribulation as a test sent by God; 5<sup>3</sup>, pride and wealth, and the transitory nature of wealth; 7<sup>29</sup>, comparison with light and the sun. No case implies dependence.

(b) The style and language of the Epistle of James can well be illustrated, as already shown, from those of the Hellenistic diatribe with which the book belongs. Furthermore, parallels in phrases and vocabulary are abundant from Philo, the author of 4 Maccabees, Clement of Rome, and Hermas,* writers of the first and second centuries after Christ, who all joined some degree of Hellenism with fundamental Jewish, or Jewish and Christian, ideas, and who were members of a partly segregated Jewish or Christian community in some Hellenistic city (Alexandria, Rome).

H. A. A. Kennedy, "The Hellenistic Atmosphere of the Epistle of James," in Expositor, eighth series, vol. ii, 1911, pp. 37-52, is a useful collection of some of the more striking parallels from Hellenistic writers.

Another work which shows in language (not in structure, nor in the broader qualities of style) special affinity to James is the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs.† This is of Palestinian origin, and was originally written in Hebrew about one hundred years before the beginning of the Christian era. Its literary quality is not lofty, and a good deal of legend and folk-lore crops out in it, but it represents in its ideas a high type of Palestinian Judaism—devout, earnest, spiritual, capable of lending itself directly to Christian use and of receiving Christian additions. The strict and plain moral teaching and the simple and devout piety of the Testaments are but little tinged with formalism or legalism, and they reveal an attractive type of popular religion such as can well have nourished itself on the O. T. Psalms, and in which many not unworthy parallels to the teachings of the Gospels are to be found. James is a far more highly educated man than the author of the Testaments, but the Jewish background of both was similar. The Testaments appear to have been translated into Greek not later, and perhaps earlier, than the early second century after Christ. The fact of Christian interpolation is undoubted, but the additions can generally be recognised, and the Greek version of these writings may fairly be accounted a monument of Hellenistic Judaism contemporary with James.

The parallels are numerous and in many instances show close verbal resemblance. For instance:

Test. Nephth. 8<sup>4</sup> καὶ ὁ διάβολος φεύζεται ἀφ' ὑμῶν, cf. Jas. 4<sup>7</sup>;

Test. Jos. 2<sup>7</sup> ἐν δέκα πειρασμοῖς δόκιμον ἀπέδειξε με καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν αὐτοῖς ἐμακροθύμησα· ὅτι μέγα φάρμακόν ἐστιν ἡ μακροθυμία καὶ πολλὰ ἀγαθὰ δίδωσιν ἡ ὑπομονή, cf. Jas. 1<sup>2-4</sup>;

We find also, in passages of indubitable Jewish origin, strong similarity in the emphasis on sincerity (ἀπλότης), mercy (ἔλεος), peace, and humility, on envy (φθόνος), anger, and arrogance, and on other virtues and vices. And in the Testaments the chief interest in the law (which is called λόγος ἀληθείας, Test. Gad 3<sup>1</sup>, cf. Jas. 1<sup>18</sup>) is on the side of the moral precepts. But all these resemblances do not go further than to exhibit a common background of high Jewish morality in which both the Testaments and James (and Hermas) share. There is no reason to assume literary relationship; these ideas and phrases were part of the ever-repeated material of Jewish sermons. They show James's origin, but do not permit the inference that he had read the Testaments, which are a valuable compend of Jewish moral ideas, not an originating centre of influence.

(c) The relation of James to other books of the N. T. itself is of the same general nature as its relation to nearly contemporary Jewish writings and to the Apostolic Fathers. In no case (unless it be Romans and Galatians) is direct knowledge or influence on either side to be admitted. The material is conveniently collected by Mayor, Epistle of St. James, ch.

3, "On the Relation of the Epistle to the Other Books of the New Testament." In the epistle to the Hebrews the references to Abraham (Heb. 11<sup>8-10</sup>, 17-19) and Rahab (Heb. 11<sup>31</sup>) as heroes of faith, and the expression καρπὸν εἰρημικὸν . . . δικαιοσύνης (Heb. 12<sup>11</sup>, cf. Jas. 3<sup>18</sup>), are the most important parallels, and they prove nothing. From the Apocalypse the most important is the promise of 2<sup>10</sup>, γίνου πιστὸς ἄχρι θανάτου καὶ δώσω σοι τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς, but this cannot be intended by James in 1<sup>12</sup>.

A closer relation is observable between James and 1 Peter, and the question of priority has been strongly argued on both sides. The two books represent opposite poles of thought. The thought of 1 Peter is closer to the theology of Paul than any other non-pauline book of the N. T., although the style and language depart noticeably from Paul; James is perhaps the least Pauline book in the N. T. Yet the two are curiously akin in their phrases and some of their ideas. The following table exhibits some of the most striking instances:

1 <sup>1 f.</sup> , cf. 4 <sup>12</sup>	1 <sup>1 f.</sup>
5 <sup>9</sup> (ἀντιστήτε)	4 <sup>7</sup>

These major instances are supported by a large number of others, in themselves less significant, which add their evidence that the authors of James and 1 Peter have come under common religious and literary influences. Beyond this the evidence does not carry us, and the established phrases and conventions which we must assume for Hellenistic Jewish synagogue sermons as well as for Christian preaching are a sufficient background to account for all the facts. It is, indeed, remarkable that of the small number of direct allusions to O. T. language in James, three are found paralleled in 1 Peter. But in two cases (Is. 40<sup>6-8</sup>, Prov. 10<sup>12</sup>) the utter difference in use makes dependence on either side highly improbable, while the third (Prov. 3<sup>34</sup>) is a saying very naturally remembered and quoted (so also in Clem. Rom. 30).* It is hard to picture the mental processes of a writer who having read James should have thereby been affected in such a manner as to produce 1 Peter, or vice versa. In general it must be said that, even if literary dependence were admitted to exist, it would be wholly impossible to decide on which side it lay.

Thorough discussions of the N. T. parallels are to be found in Spitta, Der Brief des Jakobus, 1896, pp. 155-236. For Spitta's theory of the Jewish origin of the epistle it was essential to show that James is not dependent on any Christian sources.

The parallels which the Epistle of James shows to the above-mentioned writers, both Jewish and Christian, do not in any case indicate acquaintance, still less borrowing, on either side.† Just as the typical style of the Greek diatribe persisted in recognisable form for centuries and was used by preachers and writers of diverse literary level, so likewise the phrases and vocabulary of Jewish Hellenistic religious writing and public speech at the time of the origin of the Christian church made up a common stock used independently by many writers in widely distant places for a long period. The phenomena and history of the religious language and homiletical phrases and courses of thought among English-speaking Protestants the world over during the past two centuries would provide a modern instance of substantially the same situation. From the Jews the Christians took over a large section of this body of language and thought, and used and developed it as their own. This could not have been otherwise. The apostles began this process, and it continued until this Jewish stock had been fully naturalised and its origin forgotten.

In the Epistle of James the currents represented by the Hellenistic diatribe and by the sermons and religious tracts of

Greek-speaking Jews cross and interlace. The nearest parallel to this combination among Jewish writers is the Alexandrian Philo,* among Christians the Apostle Paul. The literary personality whom we learn to know in our epistle is in part explained by these causes, but his writing also shows his own distinctive individuality, education, and experience.

§ 4. LANGUAGE.

The language of the epistle is that of a writer of the Koinē who uses Greek fluently and accurately, although his style has a certain Biblical tinge; so far as we can judge, Greek was probably his mother tongue.† His forms and syntax are correct, and appropriate to written discourse; there is less occasion than in Paul or in the Synoptic Gospels to turn from the ordinary grammars to the colloquial Greek of the papyri for illustration of strange expressions. Some instances occur of words and phrases characteristic of good Greek style and unique, or very rare, in the N. T.; so ἄγε νῦν (with plural), ἔοικεν, χρῆ, πρὸς with accusative (φθόνου) equivalent to the adverb (φθονερῶς), ἀπειράστος κακῶν, ἀπαρχή τις. Certain alliterations and plays on words are perhaps intentional, thus: 1<sup>a</sup> πειρασμοῖς περιπέσθητε ποικίλοις, 1st ἀπελήλυθεν καὶ εὐθέως ἐπελάβετο, 2<sup>a</sup> διεκρίθητε . . . κριταί, 3<sup>a</sup> μικρὸν μέλος ἐστὶν καὶ μεγάλα αὐχεῖ, 4th φαινομένη . . . ἀφανιζομένη (for others, see Mayor‡, pp. cclii ff.). Especially in his figurative language the writer shows his command of well-chosen and expressive words. The vivacity, simple directness, and general attractiveness and effectiveness of his style are conspicuous even to the reader of the English version. The relation of the style, on its Hellenistic side, to the diatribe has already been discussed (pp. 12-16).

At the same time, long and difficult words are rather seldom used, no tendency appears to elaboration of grammatical structure or to complication of sentences or periods, and there is nothing to suggest acquaintance with the higher styles of Greek literature. The general tone is plainer and less literary than that of the preface to the Gospel of Luke (Lk. 1<sup>1-4</sup>) or of the epistle to the Hebrews, or of Philo (although many of the single phrases can readily be illustrated from this last writer). Even as compared with Paul, there is less to recall the contemporary rhetoric of the school, although, on the other hand, there is less to suggest the every-day talk of the street. We may conclude that the popular Hellenistic preachers and the written tracts, now lost, which corresponded to their sermons, have combined with the Greek O. T. to form this writer's style and to give him his vocabulary.

* P. Wendland, "Philo und die kynisch-stoische Diatribe," in Wendland and Kern, Beiträge zur Geschichte d. griech. Philosophie und Religion, 1895.

† Mayor, chs. 8 and 9, treats fully of the grammar and style; note also his "Index of Greek Words."

The judgment of Erasmus (Annotationes in epistolam Jacobi, 1516) on James's style is interesting. After saying that the epistle is salubribus praeceptis referta, he continues: Nec enim referre videtur usquequaque majestatem illam et gravitatem apostolicam. Nec hebraismi tantum quantum ab apostolo Jacobo qui fuerit episcopus Hierosolymitanus expectaretur. This guarded statement was repeated by Luther in the following form (Resolutiones Lutherianae super propositionibus suis Lipsiae disputatis, 1519): Stilus epistolae illius longe est infra apostolicam majestatem nec cum Paulino ullo modo comparandus.

The vocabulary of James consists of about 570 words. About 73 of these are not found elsewhere in the N. T.* This number may be compared with 63 for 1 Peter (of the same length as James), 34 for Galatians, and 43 for Ephesians (both somewhat longer).

Of James's words all except about 25 are found in the Greek O. T. (including, of course, the Apocrypha). Only 6 words in the epistle appear to be found neither in the N. T. nor in the Greek O. T. (βρύω, ἐνάλιος, εὐπειθής, ἐφήμερος, θρήσκος, κατήφεια).

Not only through this hint from his vocabulary, but by repeated direct allusion to the language of the Greek translation is it made clear that James knew the LXX.† Thus 1<sup>10 f.</sup> is based on Is. 40<sup>6 f.</sup>; in 2<sup>21</sup> he uses the language of Gen. 22<sup>2, 9</sup>; in

This acquaintance with the LXX gives a distinct Biblical flavour to the style in general. Actual grammatical Hebraisms are few. The genitive of quality, equivalent to an adjective, appears in ἀκροατῆς ἐπιλησμονῆς (1<sup>28</sup>), κριταὶ διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν (2<sup>4</sup>); perhaps also the less strange νόμος ἐλευθερίας ([1<sup>28</sup>] 2<sup>12</sup>), ὁ κόσμος τῆς ἀδικίας (3<sup>6</sup>), τὸ πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως αὐτοῦ (1<sup>22</sup>) ought to be included. The use of ἐν in 3<sup>9</sup> may perhaps be a Hebraism. In 5<sup>17</sup> (προσευχῇ προσηύξατο) the writer is probably not imitating the Hebrew infinitive absolute; but the Christian ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι (5<sup>10, 14</sup>) may perhaps be called a Hebraism, and ποιηταὶ λόγου (1<sup>22</sup>) would probably have a different meaning in secular Greek.

But there are many cases of the use of Biblical phrases, correct but slightly unhellenic.* Thus εἰς μαρτύριον (5<sup>2</sup>), ἐλογίσθη εἰς δικαιοσύνην (2<sup>22</sup>), the frequency of ἰδοὺ (six times, as against nine in all Paul's epistles), ποιεῖν ἔλεος (2<sup>13</sup>), ποιεῖν εἰρήνην (3<sup>18</sup>), ὑπάγετε ἐν εἰρήνῃ (2<sup>16</sup>), ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ὁδοῖς αὐτοῦ (1<sup>8</sup>), μακάριος ἀνὴρ (1<sup>12</sup>), ὀρφανοὺς καὶ χήρας (1<sup>27</sup>), προσωποληψίας (2<sup>1</sup>), προσωπολημπτεῖτε (2<sup>9</sup>), τὸ καλὸν ὄνομα τὸ ἐπικληθὲν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς (2<sup>7</sup>), θηρίων τε καὶ πετεινῶν ἐρπετῶν τε καὶ ἐναλίων (3<sup>7</sup>), τοὺς καθ' ὁμοίωσιν θεοῦ γεγονότας (3<sup>9</sup>), μοιχαλίδες (4<sup>4</sup>), καθάρισατε χεῖρας (4<sup>8</sup>), εἰς τὰ ὦτα κυρίου Σαβαώθ (5<sup>4</sup>), ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς (5<sup>4</sup>), πρῶτιμον καὶ ὄψιμον (5<sup>7</sup>), πολὺσπλαγχνος (5<sup>11</sup>), are some of the characteristic expressions of this sort.

* On such expressions, see J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 10 f.

The theory that the Epistle of James is a translation from an Aramaic or Hebrew original has from time to time been put forward (references in Mayor<sup>4</sup>, p. cclx, note 1), most recently by J. Wordsworth in his discussion of the Latin Codex Corbeiensis (ff) in SB, i, 1885, pp. 142-150. The usual arguments have been a priori, on the ground that James the Lord's brother must have written Aramaic. Wordsworth found noteworthy textual variants in ff together with some cases of very free translating, and tried to explain both phenomena by the adventurous supposition that the Greek and Latin texts give two independent versions of the Aramaic original. But the textual variants are adequately, and more easily, explained on the ordinary principles of textual criticism, while the free translations do not at all imply any other original than the current Greek text in a form much like Codex Vaticanus. Wordsworth's theory is criticised by Mayor, ch. 10, and Zahn, Einleitung, § 6, note 6.

On the other side, nothing in the epistle suggests that it was not written in Greek, and there is much, including plays on words (χαπεῖν, χαράν, 1<sup>11</sup>), alliteration (1<sup>3</sup> 3<sup>4</sup>, and perhaps elsewhere), a probable Greek metrical quotation (1<sup>11</sup>), the use of the LXX, and many Greek expressions not easily retranslatable into a Semitic language, which taken together make it morally certain that Greek was the original language in which the epistle was written.

§ 5. THE IDEAS AND HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE EPISTLE.

On the ideas of the Epistle of James reference should be made (besides the commentaries and books on N. T. theology and the history of the apostolic age) to Woldemar G. Schmidt, Der Lehrgehalt des Jakobusbriefes, 1869; P. Feine, Der Jakobusbrief nach Lehranschauungen und Entstehungsverhältnissen, 1893; E. Grafe, Die Stellung und Bedeutung des Jakobusbriefes in der Entwicklung des Urchristentums, 1904; B. Weiss, Der Jakobusbrief und die neuere Kritik, 1904; E. Kühl, Die Stellung des Jakobusbriefes zum alttestamentlichen Gesetz und zur Paulinischen Rechtfertigungslehre, 1905; B. Bartmann, St. Paulus und St. Jakobus über die Rechtfertigung (Biblische Studien, ii), Freiburg, 1897.

The most striking fact about this epistle is the paucity in it of allusions and ideas and interests which were peculiar to any particular phase of early Christianity and which would indicate the origin and date of the writing. The book is by no means colourless, either in its religious or its moral aspects, but it is, for the most part, of very general applicability, a trait which gives it its curiously modern sound. This circumstance has given rise to a great divergence of critical opinion about the book, and the task of the critic is to find the place and time at which the absence of such references can be best accounted for without doing injustice to the few positive indications which the book contains.

It is, indeed, true that in a tract like this, not sent to meet the needs of any particular moment or crisis in a definite church, but aiming at the edification of any Christians into whose hands it might fall, a general treatment and but little allusion to specific conditions might be expected. Further, in any short tract of practical rather than systematic character not all sides of the writer's thought will be represented. Yet in James the discussion relates to so great a number of eminently concrete matters, and takes in so wide a range of religious thought, that it can hardly fail to give us a tolerable notion of the main ideas which were most important to the writer's religious life. In this respect it will bear comparison with many of the epistles of Paul or the Apostolic Fathers. We have a right to believe that the epistle offers a picture, not indeed complete, but yet fair and trustworthy, of the writer's religious position. And for that, as well as for the outward circumstances in which he wrote, the silences of the epistle are highly significant and must be given full weight.

The historical background of the epistle has two aspects: (a) the religious ideas which underlie the writer's practical religious exhortations, and (b) the general character and situation of the Christians, as known to the writer and implied in the book.

(a) The Ideas.

The writer's religious position is fundamentally that of later Judaism. But it is to be observed that herein he shows no trait of specific "Jewish Christianity," such as would distinguish him from early Christians generally, whether of Jewish or Gentile origin. He nowhere betrays any pride in or loyalty to the Jewish people (contrast Paul, Rom. 9<sup>1-5</sup>, Eph. 2<sup>11-12</sup>, etc.), never hints at any duties to the temple or its sacrifices, gives no sign that he observes or values the Pharisaic ideals of purification or the Sabbath or the dietary regulations. This might, indeed, be explained as due to full agreement among the Jewish Christians who constituted his environment, so that these fundamental things could be taken for granted and hence were not alluded to. And the same reason can be given for the absence of any reference to circumcision or to the exclusive privileges of the Jews in the favour of God. Yet even so, these omissions prove that the question of whether it was or was not necessary for Christians (or even for Jewish Christians) to be circumcised and observe the Mosaic law was not an important subject of dispute in those places at that time. The writer is simply not concerned about faithfulness in these matters; they do not occur to him (cf. chs. 4, 5) as points at which lack of complete devotion to God may naturally show itself. Either, then, he did not hold to those things which marked off "Jewish Christians," properly so called, from other Christians, or else no controversy about them touched his circle. The latter possibility is unlikely, because in a body of Jewish Christians who were so completely devoted to these aspects of Judaism as would in that case be supposed (cf. Acts 21<sup>20</sup>), it is unlikely that a writing of this practical tendency would be wholly devoid of any reference to them. On the other hand, a strong Jewish substratum, such as we find here, was common to early Christianity at Gentile as well as at Jewish centres. We may fairly conclude that the writer was not a partisan "Jewish Christian."

The writer's main ideas of Jewish origin can easily be put together from the epistle. They are by no means meagre, and touch on many sides of religion. He believes in one God, the creator and father of men (2<sup>19</sup> 3<sup>9</sup>) and of the universe (1<sup>17</sup>), who is holy (1<sup>12</sup>), from whom only good gifts come to men, and who is the source of all good (1<sup>6</sup> 17), in whose hands are all our ways (4<sup>15</sup>). God is merciful (5<sup>11</sup>), hears prayer (1<sup>5-7</sup> 4<sup>2 f.</sup> 5<sup>12-13</sup>), forgives sin (5<sup>15</sup> 20). A Judgment is coming upon all men (2<sup>12</sup> 4<sup>12</sup> 5<sup>6, 9</sup>), and it is our duty strictly to observe God's law (1<sup>21-25</sup> 2<sup>8-12</sup> 4<sup>11</sup>), of which a knowledge has been given us and by which we shall be judged (2<sup>12</sup>). A favourable issue for any man in this Judgment is called "justification" (2<sup>21</sup> 24<sup>1</sup>). To be "saved" and to be "justified" seem to refer to the same experience (2<sup>14</sup>, 2<sup>4</sup>, cf. 1<sup>21</sup> 4<sup>12</sup> 5<sup>20</sup>). The writer plainly thinks of this justification as given to a sincerely good man who loves God (1<sup>12</sup> 2<sup>4</sup>). Such a man will be repentant for his imperfections (5<sup>16</sup>), and will receive the forgiveness (5<sup>14</sup>) of a merciful Lord and Father (3<sup>9</sup>). It is, of course, assumed that the persons in question are, or profess to be, men of faith (2<sup>14</sup> 2<sup>5</sup>), members of the people of God (1<sup>1</sup>); the writer is not thinking of heathen, nor discussing the question of the eternal destiny of Socrates. Those who love God can look forward to life as their crown of reward (1<sup>12</sup>) and to the inheritance of a kingdom (2<sup>5</sup>).

To possess the Law of God, which is able to save our souls (1<sup>21</sup>), is a privilege and joy (1<sup>25</sup> 2<sup>12</sup>). In this law the ten commandments and other precepts of the O. T. occupy a chief place (2<sup>8-11</sup>), however much they may or may not be supplemented by other teaching and by Christian interpretation.

The devil (4<sup>7</sup>) and our own wicked impulses (1<sup>14</sup> 1<sup>15</sup>) bring us to sin, and all men do sin (3<sup>2</sup>); unforgiven sin issues in death (1<sup>15</sup> 5<sup>20</sup>), and the torment of a future punishment is mentioned (5<sup>2-6</sup>). God requires complete devotion (esp. 4<sup>1-10</sup>), a faith in himself which does not waver in its determination to hold fast to him (1<sup>6-8</sup>) in spite of trials (1<sup>2-4</sup>, 1<sup>12</sup>). A sharp contrast exists between God and the world (4<sup>4</sup>), heaven and earth (3<sup>14</sup>), and with the world and the earth the writer associates the realm of demons (3<sup>15</sup>).

Wisdom is a gift of God, and that it is indispensable for men in general, and particularly for teachers (3<sup>12-17</sup>), is taken for granted (1<sup>4</sup>). Among the duties prominent in the writer's mind are care for the poor, sick, and needy (1<sup>27</sup> 2<sup>15</sup> 1<sup>1</sup>, 5<sup>14</sup>), attention to the erring (5<sup>19</sup> 1<sup>1</sup>), impartiality to poor and rich (2<sup>1-4</sup>), peaceableness and gentleness (1<sup>20</sup> 1<sup>1</sup>, 3<sup>12-18</sup>), manifold self-restraint in speech (1<sup>26</sup> 3<sup>2-12</sup> 4<sup>11-12</sup> 5<sup>9</sup>, 1<sup>12</sup>).

The writer has a strong sense of human personal responsibility, of the importance of man's will, and of his power by God's help to put forth moral effort and succeed in the achievement of character. Good works (there is no hint that among these he includes ritual or Pharisaic acts of piety, but, on the other hand, no clear indication that he consciously rejects them) are necessary to please God (1<sup>22</sup>, 2<sup>6</sup> 2<sup>12</sup>, 14-16 3<sup>13</sup>). A living faith can be recognised by the good works of the believer (2<sup>18</sup>). It does not exist where there are no accompanying works. Faith without works is dead.

For a striking statement of the general attitude of the Jew in these matters, see C. G. Montefiore, Judaism and St. Paul, 1914, pp. 34-44. The whole description given by Montefiore of the religious attitude of the average rabbinical Jew would in most respects well sum up the fundamental ideas of the Epistle of James.

The language of James can be illustrated at countless points from Philo, as the commentary shows, but not even the contrast of heavenly and earthly (3<sup>11</sup>) shows any real contact with the specific ideas of Philo's Hellenistic Judaism.

The poor and lowly have been chosen by God for his own (2<sup>5</sup>), and have high privilege (1<sup>9</sup>); the rich are fortunate only when they lose their wealth (1<sup>10</sup>), they are selfish, lacking in the requisite complete devotion to God, and cruel (5<sup>1-6</sup>); and God hates the proud (4<sup>6</sup>, 10). The desire for riches and pleasure leads to every evil (4<sup>1-3</sup>) and alienates from God (4<sup>4</sup>).

Certain Jewish religious ideas, it will be noticed, are absent here (besides the omissions already mentioned), including some, like the Spirit of God and angels, which had an important place in the Christian inheritance from Judaism. But the whole constitutes a substantial and inclusive system of religious thought, and it is noteworthy how many religious ideas are introduced in so short a tract. In discussing a moderate number of topics, the writer has found occasion to reveal with surprising fulness his positive religious conceptions and beliefs. In such a document, as will be seen later, conspicuous omissions are likely not to be accidental, but to indicate the absence of the ideas from the writer's thinking or, at any rate, their relative unimportance for his vital religion.

In addition to this Jewish body of thought the epistle contains a few references to specifically Christian beliefs. The writer describes himself (1<sup>1</sup>) as "a worshipper of the Lord Jesus Christ"; the faith which he shares with his readers is "in our Lord Jesus Christ of glory" (2<sup>1</sup>). As with Paul, it is not easy to be sure when "the Lord" refers to God and when to Christ, but the writer bids his readers continue in the hope of "the coming of the Lord," evidently meaning Christ (5<sup>7-8</sup>). That he also means Christ by "the Lawgiver and Judge" (4<sup>12</sup>), and "the Judge" (5<sup>9</sup>) is perhaps not likely, but the fair name which they bear and which is blasphemed by the rich who oppress them (2<sup>7</sup>) is undoubtedly that of Christ, and it is probably in his name (5<sup>14</sup>) that the elders anointed the sick with oil. Jesus, then, is the Messiah, and is Lord; he abides in divine glory, and will come to judge all men and save those who love God. The Christians are probably meant by the first-fruits of God's creatures (1<sup>18</sup>), whom he begat by his word of truth, that is, by the complete revelation of his law in the form in which Christian understanding receives it. They have now taken the place, and received the attributes, formerly held by the Jews as the people of God (1<sup>1</sup>).

These Christian references are not very numerous, but they are unmistakable, and relate to the most fundamental points of primitive Christian belief. As is natural, it is chiefly, though not exclusively, in Christian connections that the eschatological side of the writer's thought comes out. The Christian elements are entirely germane to the ideas of Jewish origin and fuse with the latter in one consistent and comprehensible system.

That the Epistle of James was written not by a Christian at all but by a Jew, and that it has suffered interpolation at 1<sup>1</sup> and 2<sup>1</sup>, is elaborately argued in the valuable book of F. Spitta, Der Brief des Jakobus, 1896; and the same idea was independently worked out by L. Massebieau, "L'épître de Jacques est-elle l'œuvre d'un Chrétien?" in Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, xxxii, 1895, pp. 249-283. Hardly a single scholar besides these two has been led to adopt the theory. The reasons which have seemed decisive against it are the following:

(2) The passages of the epistle interpreted above as Christian are an integral part of the structure of the letter, and in the case of most of them Spitta's attempt to show that the language was equally possible for a Jew is unsuccessful. Note also the surely Christian reference to "the elders of the church" (5<sup>14</sup>). Again, if the discussion of faith and works in 2<sup>14-25</sup> implies a polemic against Paul or Paulinists, that is conclusive for the Christian origin of the epistle; and the position of recognised primary significance assumed for faith in 1<sup>5</sup> and 2<sup>5</sup> is both characteristic of Christian thinking and unlikely for a non-Christian Jewish writer.

(3) The epistle contains nothing whatever which positively marks it as distinctively Jewish. There is no sentence which a Jew could have written and a Christian could not; its Jewish ideas are without exception those that a Christian could hold. This peculiar stamp of thought would, if Jewish, be almost, if not quite, without example among Jewish writers; while to suggest that the strictly Jewish parts have been excised by the Christian interpolator supposes a degree of literary activity on his part not contemplated in the original theory and dangerous to its integrity. The idea of a Christian editor largely modifying a previous Jewish document is a theory which would have little to commend it as against the usual notion of a Christian writer freely using congenial Jewish material.

Important criticisms of Spitta's views are those of E. Haupt, in Theol. Studien und Kritiken, lxi, 1896, pp. 747-768; Harnack, CaL, i, 1897, pp. 485-491; Zahn, Einleitung, 1897, § 8, note 7; Mayor<sup>1</sup>, 1910, pp. cxcii-cciii.

In this system of thought, however, in which the fundamental ideas of primitive Christianity appear in union with a form of Judaism, simple, rational, and free from Jewish nationalist and partisan traits, we are struck by the absence of many elements which quickly became common, and some which are universal, in other early Christianity. First, and most noticeable, is the absence of any mention whatever of the death of Christ. There is no reference to it either as constituting a problem (cf. Lk. 24<sup>12-27</sup>, Acts 2<sup>23</sup> 3<sup>18</sup> 17<sup>3</sup> 26<sup>23</sup>, 1 Cor. 1<sup>2</sup>), as the means of men's salvation, or even as a significant event in the history of Jesus Christ. In this omission our author stands in contrast with practically every other writer of the N. T. and with the Apostolic Fathers save Hermas, and the substance of his epistle forbids the explanation that he had no occasion to make such a reference. That the writer thought of salvation as to be brought to believers through Christ at his coming (5<sup>7</sup>) is evident, but it is equally plain that he had no vivid consciousness, and perhaps no clear thought at all, of any relation of Christ's death to God's saving grace.

Here we have a striking contrast to Paul. And this contrast is borne out by other omissions. Paul's doctrine held to a radical change produced by faith. The old man is put off, the Christian has become a new creature, he is no longer in the flesh but in the Spirit, and Christ dwells in him, he is free from bondage to sin, is already justified, and may count on complete salvation through the power of God, the supernatural forces meanwhile showing their presence in his new ability to do right. The realistic and literal meaning of all this in Paul's thought is not to be minimised. But of this whole conception of miraculous entrance on a new mode of existence through complete transformation by an initiation nothing appears in James. This whole method of viewing religion is alien to his way. He believes in God's help, but without any mysticism whatever. And he probably makes no reference to the Holy Spirit (see note on 4th). The omission of many of the individual ideas which find expression in Paul's epistles would not be significant, but this broad contrast in the general view of the religious life is important, for (apart from the phraseology of James's discussion of faith and works) all the positive ideas of James, taken individually, would have been highly satisfactory to Paul.

The only exception to what has just been said of the absence of this essential side of Paul's thought from James is the figure of birth for becoming a Christian (1st). But this is expressed by a term (ἀπεκύησεν) not found in Paul and foreign to the technical use (ἀναγέννησις) of the early Gentile church. It implies only that the Christians have succeeded to the Jewish privilege of "sons of God," and does not carry us into the circle of Pauline ideas referred to above.

The use of the term Lord ([ὁ] κύριος) for Jesus Christ (1st 2nd 5th 14th), although characteristic of Paul, was not original with him, and marana tha (1 Cor. 16th, Didache 10th) shows that it had early become current with Aramaic-speaking Christians and must have been widely used.

Its use does not imply other Hellenistic ideas. See W. Bousset, Kyrios Christos, 1913, p. 103, note 3; J. Weiss, Christus, 1909 (Eng. transl. 1911); H. Böhlig, "Zum Begriff Kyrios bei Paulus," in Zt. für neuest. Wissenschaft, xiv, 1913, pp. 23-37.

While James and Paul thus stand in this sharp contrast, no hint appears in James of controversy with Pauline Christianity over the validity of the Jewish law, nor of attack on Paul personally. In 2<sup>14-16</sup> James is not engaged in doctrinal controversy, but is repelling the practical misuse which was made, or which might be made, of Paul's doctrine of justification by faith alone in order to excuse moral laxity. James shows no comprehension of what Paul actually meant by his formula; but the formula itself is foreign to him, and he heartily dislikes it.

The relation to Paul implied in 2<sup>14-16</sup> is the most discussed subject in connection with the epistle. Large references to the abundant literature may be found in B. Bartmann, St. Paulus und St. Jakobus über die Rechtfertigung (Biblische Studien, ii), 1897, pp. 1-17. That James wrote after Paul's doctrine had become well known to the church must be admitted, for he quotes exactly Paul's formula (2<sup>11, 14</sup>, cf. Gal. 2<sup>16</sup>, Rom. 3<sup>28</sup>), and this formula was the outgrowth of the most original element of Paul's system and is alien to earlier Jewish thought. Whether James shows signs of having gained his knowledge of Paul from actually reading Paul's epistles cannot be determined. His language is probably capable of explanation on the assumption that he had not read them, and his entire failure to suggest that Paul's formula could be dissociated from its misuse shows at least that he had paid surprisingly little attention to Romans and Galatians.

Most of the discussions of the relation of James to Paul err through the inability of their authors to separate themselves from modern theological issues and the method of modern theological definition. Certainly James did not understand Paul's motive for insisting that justification is by faith alone and not by works, and he resists a doctrine which seems to him to mean that good conduct can safely be neglected by a Christian. But he has no idea of disparaging faith, which he everywhere assumes as present and which he highly values. His point is that faith and works are inseparable in any properly constituted Christian life, and he argues this clearly and effectively. That he supposed the false inference, which threatened morality, to be a necessary consequence of Paul's formula is not certain, though not unlikely. Paul himself would have had no quarrel with James's positive contention about morality, although he might have preferred to describe good conduct as "the fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. 5<sup>22-23</sup>) rather than as the evidence of a living faith (Jas. 2<sup>18</sup>); but he would have deplored as utterly superficial and inadequate James's mode of stating the conditions of justification.

There has been much discussion as to whether Paul and James meant the same thing by the terms "justification," "works," and "faith." As to "justification," the idea clearly is the same, although Paul's peculiar use of it in his system, whereby it pertains to the initial moment of the Christian life and not merely to the day of judgment, is wholly foreign to James. In "works" Paul would have included the good conduct to which James refers, but when he speaks of "works of the law" he often has prominently in mind such ritual requirements as circumcision, which are not at all what James is referring to. As to "faith," there is no difference of "concept," for James has no special "concept" of faith, but is talking of the act or state popularly called faith; it is not a question of definition, but of observation. If it be true that Paul would have denied the name of faith to the "dead" faith of which James speaks, that is because he had changed and enlarged the connotation, and so reduced the denotation, of the term. Paul and James move in this matter in different circles of thought, and the attempt to superimpose one circle on the other in order to determine their agreement or disagreement in detail is futile. They can be compared only in the large. Then it appears that the two writers are at one on the moral question; and that the substance of James's own theology is all contained in Paul's, while he lacks everything that made Paul's view distinctive and original. The same relation subsists here that appears in nearly every other comparison between James and kindred thinkers.

As there is no contact, friendly or otherwise, with the Hellenistic, or mystical, side of Paul's thought and no controversy with Paul personally,* so there is naturally no suggestion either of gnostic tendencies or of polemic against them. In the Johanne literature gnosticising conceptions everywhere affect the method of thought, even though a vigorous argument is carried on against the results of their dangerous tendencies. James lives in a different atmosphere.

Allusion to gnostic tendency has been found in the contrast of true and false wisdom (3<sup>13-18</sup>), the word σοφία (3<sup>14</sup>), the use of τέλειος (1<sup>4</sup> 17, 24 32), the blame of God for temptation (1<sup>13</sup>), the disrespect for and judging of the law (4<sup>11</sup>, Cerdon and Marcion), the misuse of the Pauline doctrine of faith (2<sup>14-19</sup>); but no one of these implies such notions. See Pfeiderer, Urchristentum<sup>1</sup>, 1902, ii, 545-547, for a statement of that view, which has exercised considerable influence; cf. Grafe, Stellung und Bedeutung des Jakobusbriefes, 1904, p. 44.

There is no inclination to asceticism in the epistle, for the praise of the poor and condemnation of the rich and the requirement of a radical choice between God and the world are no more ascetic, in any proper sense of the term, than are the sayings of Jesus on these subjects. No sacramental tendency shows itself. No speculative interest appears in any direction. The eschatology is incidental and undeveloped. And the post-apostolic notion sometimes ascribed to James, of Christianity as a body of doctrine to be believed ("the faith," "fides quae creditur"), and correspondingly of faith as an "intellectualistic" acceptance of propositions, is not at all the "dead" faith of which James speaks.* The demons' faith in one God stands, in fact, at the opposite pole from this "intellectualism"; for as a faith in God's existence and power it is sincere and real; its fault lies in its complete divorce from love or an obedient will.

When we make a comparison with the Apostolic Fathers the positive traits which give definite character to the thinking of every one of them are all lacking in James. Most of these have been included in the summary of things absent already given, but the entire absence of allegory is a striking addition that can be made to the list. Indeed, James exhibits not one distinctly marked individual theological tendency which would set him in positive relation to any of the strong forces either of the apostolic or of the post-apostolic period. His simple-minded and robust emphasis on the power and duty of a right fundamental choice and of right action, and his way of describing his religion as God-given "law," are the two most distinctive theological ideas in the epistle. The latter of these has, indeed, reminded critics of the doctrine of the new law and the new Lawgiver in the Apostolic Fathers and elsewhere.† But James does not make this the starting-point of a theology, or an important principle of his christology. No more does he carry what might readily have become a doctrine of works and of the human will a step beyond the simple expression of sincere moral earnestness. The many parallels between James and the Apostolic Fathers* are due to the share that both have in the common stock of moral and religious ideas which Christianity took over from Judaism; they are given a false prominence by the lack in James of distinctive religious ideas which would have sharply marked him off from these kindred thinkers.

† For instance, cf. Bousset, Kyrios Christos, pp. 361, note 3, 368-373; F. Loofs, Leitfaden zum Studium der Dogmengeschichte<sup>4</sup>, pp. 92 f. 118, 123 f.

A large dependence on the sayings of Jesus in the Synoptic Gospels has often been found in the epistle. An exhaustive list and full discussion of those parallels is given by Spitta.† Most of them, as Spitta rightly contends, have no bearing on the question, being merely verbal or else due only to common relation to Jewish ideas. The following, however, are worth noting; the context should be examined in each case.

Jas. 1<sup>1</sup>: αἰτέτω . . . καὶ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ. Mt. 7<sup>7</sup>, Lk. 11<sup>9</sup>: αἰτεῖτε καὶ δοθήσεται ὑμῖν.

Jas. 2<sup>2</sup>: τοὺς πτωχοὺς . . . κληρονόμους τῆς βασιλείας. Mt. 5<sup>4</sup>: μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοὶ τῷ πνεύματι, ὅτι αὐτῶν ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν, cf. Lk. 6<sup>20</sup> (οἱ πτωχοί).

Jas. 3<sup>13</sup>: τοῖς ποιῶσιν εἰρήνην. Mt. 5<sup>9</sup>: μακάριοι οἱ εἰρηνοποιοί.

Jas. 4<sup>4</sup>: μοιχαλίδες. Mk. 8<sup>22</sup>: ἐν τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ τῇ μοιχαλίδι (cf. Mt. 12<sup>22</sup> 16<sup>4</sup>).

Jas. 5<sup>1-4</sup>: ἔγε νῦν οἱ πλούσιοι κτλ. Lk. 6<sup>24</sup>: πλὴν οὐαὶ ὑμῖν τοῖς κλουσίοις, ὅτι ἀπέχετε τὴν παράκλησιν ὑμῶν.

Jas. 5<sup>11</sup> (oaths). Mt. 5<sup>34-37</sup>.

Some of these parallels (especially the last one) may well be cases of direct influence from a word of Jesus, and there may also be influence from his words hidden in some of the slighter parallels. But more significant than these single and disputable points is the broad fact that we find James following some of the larger interests of the Synoptic Gospels and entirely untouched by others. His ever-recurring insistence on doing, both in itself and in contrast to merely hearing or saying, represents the same type of religion which has so chosen the sayings in the Gospels (especially Matthew) as to emphasise exactly the same point. (Mt. 7<sup>21-23</sup>, Lk. 6<sup>46</sup>, Mt. 7<sup>24-27</sup>, Lk. 6<sup>47-48</sup>, Mt. 25<sup>31-46</sup>, etc.) So also with the value set on poverty and the warning to the rich, with the injunctions to prayer, to complete devotion to God (Mt. 6<sup>19-24</sup>), to restraint in judging and in unkind speech, and with other topics. These are mostly ideas natural to devout Judaism; the point to be noted is the special and strong interest in them found alike in the compilers of the Gospels (or of their source) and in James. Yet equally conspicuous is James's omission of some of the chief motives which have produced the Synoptic Gospels. Not only does he, like other early writers, but in more complete measure than they, fail to use the traits of Jesus' life and character, even where they would have been particularly apt for reinforcement of moral and religious appeal, but the absence of the term Son of Man, and of the idea of the Kingdom of God as an important structural element in his thought, separate James from the Synoptic type on the side of the sayings, while the comparative absence of eschatological interest and the entire absence of interest in the death of Christ (those great commanding topics which so largely dominate the Markan side of the Synoptic tradition) forbid the supposition that from the same circle and age could have come both a gospel like Matthew or Luke (to say nothing of Mark) and the Epistle of James. James was in religious ideas nearer to the men who collected the sayings of Jesus than to the authors of the Gospels, but his religious interests are not identical with those of either group.

(b) The Situation.

We must now turn to the general character and situation of the Christians whose needs and tendencies guided the composition of the epistle. Here we get no help from the address in 1<sup>1</sup>. The tract is not a letter sent to a definite group of individuals, and by "the twelve tribes in the dispersion" were meant any Christians anywhere who might read the book. We have to suppose that the author has in view general Christian conditions, as he knew them where he lived and as he supposed them to exist elsewhere.

The Christians who are in mind evidently consisted mainly of poor and humble folk, living along with other persons much better off who appear to have been large farmers (5<sup>4</sup>); travelling traders are also a familiar class (4<sup>13</sup> &c.). These Christians are subject to troubles such as might shake their faith in Providence (1<sup>2</sup>), but are not represented as exposed to any direct religious persecution. The rich, indeed, are mostly hostile to Christianity, and are oppressors of the poor through the courts and by other methods (2<sup>6</sup> &c. 5<sup>4</sup>), but nothing indicates that their oppression was religious persecution.

The traits of these Christians, so far as mentioned in the epistle, are easily comprehensible. The writer offers, indeed, no praise of his readers such as would be found in a Pauline letter; but that is part of its character as a diatribe. They have certain moral dangers, they need encouragement and warning; but it would be a mistake to suppose that the conditions known to the writer were those of any conspicuous demoralisation or monstrous worldliness. If some relied on their Christian profession to make up for defect in Christian practise, the crime which draws out that censure is, after all, nothing graver than an excessive civility and truckling to rich strangers who appeared at their church meeting. Their quarrelsome propensities seem to have been strongly developed in both word and act (3<sup>9</sup> &c. 12-16 4<sup>1-3</sup>, 11 5<sup>9</sup>), but more is not implied than the ordinary frictions and wrong speeches of decent, but somewhat ungoverned, people.

Nothing worse is indicated here than took place at Thessalonica, at Corinth, at Philippi, at Jerusalem, in the earliest years of those churches, and we have no right to infer from the faults of James's readers a relatively late stage in their Christian history. Nothing in the epistle, it is true, refers to them as if they had lately come from Judaism or heathenism, or breathes the fresh enthusiasm of a newly planted church, and the sense of the very recent conversion of the readers which is often found in Paul is lacking (so even 1<sup>18</sup>). But it is wrong to say that a condition of Christian life is here indicated so secularised as to imply a very long lapse of time since these Christian churches were founded.

That these Christians lived among Jews, not as mission outposts among the heathen, and were themselves Jews, is the implication of the whole epistle. There is no reference to idolatry, to slaves, to a generally accepted lax standard of sexual morality, to any surrounding heathenism. In a heathen city their difficulties would have been likely to come from the police, or from neighbours poor like themselves and jealous; here the oppression is from the rich, who maltreat their work-people. The apostrophe to the rich (5<sup>1-6</sup>) is in language full of allusion to the O. T., as if those who are attacked might be expected (if they would but read) to feel the force of an appeal to the impartial severity of the Lord of Sabaoth in the Judgment and to the torments of fire in the last days. The Christian assembly is called a "synagogue"—not, perhaps, a decisive piece of evidence, but yet significant in confirmation of the rest. The picture in 5<sup>14-16</sup> of the visit of the elders to the sick man with oil and prayer and confession is a curiously exact reproduction of what Jewish writers tell of Jewish ways. The sense of the pressing duty of almsgiving and of visiting the unfortunate are traits of a Jewish community. The knowledge of the O. T. everywhere assumed proves, however, no more here than at Corinth (cf. Clement of Rome), and the writer's familiarity with Jewish midrashic embellishment of the O. T. stories (5<sup>17</sup>) is significant rather for him than for his readers.

That the conditions were those of Palestine seems directly implied by the reference (5<sup>7</sup>) to "the early and latter [rain]." Only in Palestine among the countries that come in question do the seasonal conditions produce the intensity of anxious hope to which this verse refers. By reason of just that intensity of feeling (as well as because of the comparative inconspicuousness of the few O. T. passages where these rains are mentioned) the phrase has every appearance of being not a literary allusion but a reference to a familiar fact of daily life. If the word καύσων in 1<sup>1</sup> means the sirocco, that would suit the climate of Palestine, or of other Oriental regions, but the word may mean merely "heat" and so give no specific implication.

These Palestinian Jewish Christians formed an established religious body, with a regular meeting, doubtless both for instruction and for worship (cf. 1<sup>19-27</sup>), of which no secret was made and which outsiders were more than welcome to visit. They were numerous enough to be a community (not necessarily, nor probably, segregated from the rest of the city or village) in which social vices and virtues could exist (so ἐν ὑμῖν 4<sup>1-2</sup> 5<sup>12-16</sup>). They had elders (5<sup>14</sup>), but there is no mention of bishops or deacons. They also had "teachers" (3<sup>1</sup>), a class to which the writer himself belonged, which is well known in early Christianity, and which persisted in Palestine until the third century (cf. Ps.-Clement, Epistles to Virgins). What ch. 3 indicates concerning the functions and character of these teachers, as well as about the ideals to be cherished by them, need not be here recited.

The general state of the country and the relations of these churches with their Jewish neighbours (other than the rich) are but little touched on in the epistle. The impression throughout the tract is of a settled condition of affairs. There is no indication of war or of public disturbance or calamity; no allusion is made to the Jewish war or to the destruction of Jerusalem. Agriculture and trade appear to be carried on in peace; the uncertainties of life are those of ordinary peaceful times. There has been opportunity for the Christian churches to grow and establish themselves—mainly through winning converts among the humbler classes. Nothing in the epistle implies a time of very active missionary work. The rich who blaspheme are evidently for the most part out of reach of Christian influence (2<sup>6-7</sup>); if one of them comes to the Christian meeting a flutter of officious attention arises in the congregation. Argumentative apologetics do not show themselves in any way, whether in the choice or the treatment of religious topics—the contrast here to the writings of Paul is striking. Nor does any acute crisis in the relations of Christians and non-Christians appear to exist; one would infer that the Christians, although very possibly disliked, were tolerated and free to maintain their own activity and inner life, with their own officials and constituency, under the instruction of their own teachers. The Christians' relations to non-Christian neighbours who worship the same God and Father appear to be peaceful; they can well be ruled by the same counsels which are primarily given with reference to mutual relations among Christians.

B. Weiss has advanced an ingenious but untenable view, which is clearly and fully stated in his Jakobusbrief und die neuere Kritik, 1904, esp. pp. 17 ff. He holds that ch. 3 of the epistle is intended to correct unwise missionary methods ("falscher Bekehrungseifer") on the part of the Christians. Out of these, he thinks, arose also the internal troubles of which ch. 4 speaks. Nothing in the epistle seems to me to be in accord with this notion. Weiss builds it on the singular argument that since there is no indication in the epistle of doctrinal diversities within the church there was nothing that the "teachers" could teach to their fellow Christians. Hence they must have been missionaries to non-Christians!

Nothing in the epistle suggests that the writer is especially familiar with conditions at Jerusalem.

§ 6. THE ORIGIN OF THE EPISTLE.

(a) History of Opinion as to the Author.

M. Meinertz, Der Jakobusbrief und sein Verfasser in Schrift und Ueberlieferung (Biblische Studien, x, 1-3), Freiburg, 1905; see infra, pp. 86-109, "History of the Epistle in the Church."

The views of modern scholars will be found well summarised in J. Moffatt, Introduction to the Literature of the New Testament, 1911, pp.

The first word of the epistle declares it to have been written by "James." But nothing indicates directly and explicitly which James is meant, and it is not even clear that the author is an apostle or that he is a person mentioned elsewhere in the N. T. The earliest known opinion on the person of the writer is that of Origen (infra, pp. 92 f.), who understood the author to be James the Lord's brother. This identification may well have come to him from tradition, and may have been shared by Clement, who probably was acquainted with the epistle (infra, pp. 91 f.); but of all that we have no positive knowledge whatever. In any case, this view became the standing opinion, with but few exceptions, in the churches, Greek, Latin, and Syrian, which successively adopted the epistle into their N. T.

Eusebius, in stating that the epistle is not accepted by some churches, doubtless had in mind the Syrians and perhaps the Latins, but he does not intimate that any one who held to its apostolic authorship attributed it to any other James than the Lord's brother, and does not imply that he knew of any rival positive tradition. He himself seems to have accepted the epistle, as did Jerome, whose more definite statement is probably only a paraphrase of the remarks of Eusebius, H. e. ii, 23.

Jerome, De vir. ill. 2, Jacobus qui appellatur frater domini, cognomento Justus, ut nonnulli existimant, Joseph ex alia uxore, ut autem mihi videtur, Mariae, sororis matris domini, cujus Johannes in libro suo meminil, filius, post passionem domini statim ab apostolis Hierosolymorum episcopus ordinatus, unam tantum scripsit epistolam, quae de septem catholicis est, quae et ipsa ab alio quodam sub nomine ejus edita adseritur, licet paulatim tempore procedente obtinuerit auctoritatem.

Nearly all succeeding writers of ancient and mediæval times, whether they follow the Epiphanian or the Hieronymian theory of the personal relationship to Jesus of James the Lord's brother, ascribe to him the epistle. In most instances, indeed, the author is referred to simply as "James the apostle," but many writers (e. g. Chrysostom, Andrew of Crete, Rufinus, Prosper of Aquitaine, Gregory of Tours, Bede, Bar-Hebræus) make it clear that James the Lord's brother is intended. In a very few cases the author of the epistle is taken to be James son of Zebedee. Thus the tenth century (so Gebhardt) Latin Codex Corbeiensis has a subscription to the epistle: Explicit epistola Jacobi filii Zæbedei; and a series of Spanish writers, headed by Isidore of Seville, †636, and running down to the seventeenth century, have been led by national patriotism to claim the epistle for their apostle and patron, St. James of Compostella (the son of Zebedee). This tendency is to be observed in the Mozarabic liturgy; and through some channel (perhaps popular rather than learned) it has reached Dante (Paradiso, xxv, 13-18, 29-33, 76-78, 94 f.). But in general there was no departure from the traditional view; and down to the sixteenth century, if nothing to the contrary is indicated, a reference to "James the apostle" as author of the epistle is to be taken as meaning James the Lord's brother.

Meinertz, op. cit. pp. 211-215, Zahn, Einleitung, § 5, note 3. The preface to the Catholic epistles printed in the editio princeps of the Peshitto (ed. Widmanstad, 1555) has not been confirmed from any ancient Syriac Ms. and is probably no older than that edition. It reads: "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ we print three epistles of James, Peter, and John, who were witnesses of the revelation of our Lord when he was transfigured before their eyes on Mount Tabor, and who saw Moses and Elijah who talked with him."

With the Reformation came criticism of the Epistle of James and corresponding variety in the views of its authorship. Erasmus and Cajetan were in doubt, while many Lutherans wholly denied apostolic authorship, and Luther himself was disposed to ascribe the epistle to "some good pious man who had taken some sayings from the apostles' disciples" (Sämmtl. Werke, Erlangen ed., vol. lxiii, p. 157). The possibility that the epistle was written by James son of Alphæus (distinguished from the Lord's brother) also came into view. But in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries Protestant opinion settled back into the traditional view, holding the epistle to be genuine and to be the work of the Lord's brother. No Protestant writer of influence has ever taken up the cause of the son of Zebedee, or of the son of Alphæus (as distinct from the Lord's brother), for neither of which views, indeed, can anything be said.

For Roman Catholic writers the decree of the Council of Trent merely determined that the epistle must be accepted as by an "apostle James," and the obiter dictum (Sess. xiv, Doctrina de sacramento extremæ unctionis, ch. i, De institutione sacramenti extremæ unctionis) which referred to extreme unction as per Jacobum autem apostolum ac domini fratrem fidelibus commendatum ac promulgatum, did not restrict Catholics to a corresponding view of the epistle. This left room for the Spanish opinion in favour of the son of Zebedee, as well as for the uncertainty of Cornelius à Lapide, †1637, and others; but these exceptions are rare, and in the nineteenth century it does not appear that any Roman Catholic writer on the epistle attributed it to any other author than James the Lord's brother.

Modern Protestant criticism of the epistle begins with the first edition of De Wette's Einleitung, 1826, in which its apostolic origin was roundly denied. Later scholars are mainly divided between those who accept the epistle as a genuine work of James the Lord's brother (on Protestant ideas about his personality, see infra, p. 59) and those who attribute it to an unknown writer of a later generation. Occasionally this rejection proceeded from orthodox Lutheran motives like those of the sixteenth century,* but in most instances the rejection of the apostolic origin of the Epistle of James goes with the critical rejection of other traditions as to the N. T. literature. The name of James son of Zebedee has found but few to support it; and the view urged by Spitta and Massebieau that the writer was not a Christian but a Jew has met with small favour. If the writer was not an apostle, three views are possible: (1) that the writer was an otherwise unknown James, (2) that the first verse is a later addition, (3) that the epistle was from the start pseudepigraphic. All these views are represented among Protestant scholars.

Those who hold the author to be James the Lord's brother assign the epistle either to a date before c. 50 (so Beyschlag, Zahn, Mayor, and many others) or to one shortly before the death of James (62 or a little later), and naturally think of Jerusalem as the place of composition. Among critics who reject the apostolic authorship, the dates given show wide variation, but are seldom earlier than 90 or later than 130, although a few carry the possible date down as late as 150. As to the place, these critics are for the most part divided between Palestine and Rome.

(b) Conclusions.

From the study of the internal evidence given by the historical background and ideas of James must be drawn what we can know of the date and authorship of the epistle. External evidence carries us only to the point that the epistle was probably not written later than 150 A.D. That would seem certainly implied by the belief of Origen that it was the work of James an apostle, even though his testimony to the actual authorship be not accepted. It is, indeed, probable that the epistle bore from the first the name of James, and that thereby was intended the brother of the Lord, but nothing in the epistle or in the conditions of literary production of that age forbids the idea that such a tract was originally pseudonymous. The title and the tradition offer the name of a conceivable author; but they create no overpowering presumption that he was the real one.

Harnack, Lehre der Zwölf Apostel (Texte und Untersuchungen, ii), 1884, pp. 106-109, CaL, i, 1897, pp. 485-491, holds that the epistle, written 120-150 A.D. as an anonymous compilation of earlier sayings, began with 1<sup>1</sup> and was not made over into an Epistle of James by the addition of 1<sup>1</sup> until toward the end of the second century. For this view, which is part of a theory that this process was applied to several

N. T. writings, there is no evidence in the case of the Epistle of James. The first verse, if properly understood, makes a suitable opening to the tract, and even if it be held, as Harnack holds, that James the Lord's brother cannot have written the epistle, neither anything in the epistle itself nor the literary custom of the time makes any difficulty in supposing it a pseudonymous religious tract. Against the theory appeal is made to the apparent relation of  $\chi\alpha\rho\epsilon\nu$  (v.<sup>2</sup>) to  $\chi\alpha\lambda\epsilon\iota\nu$  (v.<sup>1</sup>); it is also said that an editor introducing at so late a date an attribution to James would have made it unmistakable which James was intended (cf. Zahn, Einleitung, § 8, note 1). These counter-arguments are not conclusive, but Harnack's theory is still less convincing.

We may sum up the pertinent points in the internal evidence already discussed. The writer and the readers whom he expected to reach by his tract were Greek-speaking Jewish Christians in Palestine. The churches are apparently past the earlier stages of their life; they had been formed not very recently and are living under settled conditions among Jewish neighbours as an accepted part of the whole Palestinian community. Neither life nor thought in the church is dominated by passionate missionary effort. No crisis seems present in the internal affairs of these believers; and there is no indication of public disturbance or of recent or impending calamity in civil matters. The great controversy over the Law, of which we read in the Acts and the epistles of Paul, is no longer rife.

The writer himself writes Greek with entire facility, and has become so familiar with the literary type of the Hellenistic diatribe that he can freely use it (evidently not for the first time here) as the vehicle of his Christian admonitions. He is himself, no doubt, a Jew, but accustomed to read the O. T. in the Septuagint version. His main ideas are Jewish, and his distinctively Christian thinking primitive though unmistakable. Religion appears to him mainly in the guise of a noble spiritual Law. He is later than Paul, of whose formulas he disapproves without understanding their real purpose. Singularly devoid of contact with the progressive movements which were elsewhere developing toward second-century Christian thought, he does not descry within his horizon, still less contain in himself, any of the germinant heresies of the age. Even the tendencies which led the exclusive and stagnant form of Jewish Christianity to solidify itself into a heresy are alien to him. He represents an admirable type of Christianity, but one of extraordinary intellectual isolation.

These internal indications are best satisfied by supposing that the epistle was written by a Christian teacher in some hellenistic city of Palestine, in the period of quiet after the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A.D.* and before the disturbances which culminated in the rebellion of Bar-Cochba, 132-135 A.D. For a closer dating than 75-125 A.D. the epistle seems to provide no aid.

As to the place of origin the epistle is wholly without suggestion, and a number of towns in Palestine could show the required conditions. A good example is Cæsarea, the Roman capital. Here was a Romanised city containing a population partly Jewish, partly heathen, in which the writer's contact with Hellenistic moral preaching would be easily supposable, but where the Christians would not have found themselves out of relation to Jewish life. Christians existed at Cæsarea from an early time (Acts 10 f. 21<sup>8, 10</sup>), and its continued importance as a Christian centre is attested by the references in the Clementine Recognitions. No sufficient reason exists for thinking that the author of the Epistle of James actually lived here, but it happens that more is known about Cæsarea than about most similar places, and it is instructive to find that its known circumstances would well account for the origin of the epistle.† Much the same could be said of Tiberias, if there were any such tradition of Christians there.‡

The general view here stated of the time and place of origin of the Epistle of James excludes the traditional authorship by * A date earlier than the Jewish war is unlikely because the epistle ignores the Pauline controversy over the law while it yet shows a knowledge of Pauline formulas.

† On Cæsarea, see Schürer, GJV, § 23, I, 9 (and other references in the Index); G. A. Smith, Historical Geography of the Holy Land, pp. 138 ff.; JE, art. "Cæsarea"; EB, art. "Cæsarea."

James the Lord's brother. Is this indirect result confirmed by any convincing direct evidence? Such proof is difficult to get because so little is known of James's ideas or character; yet two special considerations tend to make it unlikely that the author was James.

(1) The first is the writer's contact with Hellenism. Not only is the epistle written in a Greek style better than that of most writers of the N. T., but the writer shows a contact with Greek modes of public preaching and with Greek ideas and illustrations which would not be expected in a Galilean peasant whose experience of the world, even in the period of his broadest activity, came through his leadership of the Christians at Jerusalem. And this remains true, even when all necessary deductions have been made for the later and legendary nature of the ascetic traits with which the description given by Hege-sippus has endowed the "bishop of Jerusalem."

(2) The second point has to do with what we know of James the Lord's brother's religious attitude. He was deeply engaged with the questions directly arising out of the controversy between Paul and the Judaizers (Acts 15, 21<sup>18 ff.</sup>, Gal. 2<sup>1-10</sup> 2<sup>12</sup>); and although he took a mediating position at Jerusalem, yet he was fully trusted as a leader by the crowds of Christians, "all zealous for the law," who lived there, while the allusion in Gal. 2<sup>12</sup> surely indicates that his ideas of Jewish Christian observance of the Jewish dietary regulations were strict. But in the epistle all these questions lie completely outside the circle of the writer's interest, extensive as that circle is. And this becomes of greater significance because the writer has in mind and discusses Paul's formulas. He disapproves of them, but on other grounds than that which chiefly moved the Judaizers of Paul's day, and caused that well-known controversy to be the life-and-death struggle of exclusive Jewish Christianity. Then the question was whether such "works" of the Law as circumcision, the dietary rules, and the Sabbath were requisite to justification; now, without a hint of that question, the objection to Paul's statement is that it seems to imply that men can be justified without showing any of the "works" of Christian love. It seems, to say the least, unlikely that a representative leader who had taken a great part in the earlier controversy should, within fifteen years, in discussing the same forms of statement, betray no consciousness whatever of that controversy or of its vital significance for the section of the church to which he belonged. The writer of the epistle is anxious for the spiritual welfare of Jewish Christians; he shows no sign of any concern about the interests of Jewish Christianity.

If, then, this epistle probably bore from the start the name of "James, servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ," and yet is not from the pen of James, the well-known leader of Jewish Christianity, might we not suppose it to be the work of some otherwise unknown Palestinian Christian sharing this not uncommon name? This is undoubtedly possible; in view, however, of the conspicuous position and wide, heroic fame of the Lord's brother, it does not seem likely. A Christian epistle bearing his name, with no special indication of the identity of the author, could hardly have been put out in Palestine in the first or early second century without seeming to the Christian public of that age to claim the authorship of the great James, just as it did in the time of Origen, a century later. And the literary customs of the time make the publication of a pseudonymous epistle well conceivable, even for an earnest and sincere writer, at a time when James himself had been dead certainly for fifteen years, perhaps for more than fifty.

The origin here supposed for the epistle seems to accord well with its earliest history in the church. Produced after the apostolic period, in a secluded part of Christendom, and having no immediate significance for current controversy, it was preserved in Palestine alone for nearly or quite a century. Then, its pseudonymous character in the meantime forgotten, it came to the knowledge of the Greek church either through being brought to Alexandria in the second century or through one of the visits of Origen to Palestine. The use of it in the pseudoclementine Epistles to Virgins of the third century may have been due to its currency among Greek-speaking Christians in Palestine, where those epistles were written. Since our epistle was known to be an ancient book when it first came to the attention of Origen (or of Clement of Alexandria?), and since it purported to be written by James, apparently the Lord's brother of that name, and since it contained nothing unworthy of such an origin, it was gradually accepted, first in Alexandria, then, as it became known more widely and with high authority recommending it, elsewhere in the Christian world. This process went on slowly because the church leaders were aware that the book was a newcomer which had not been read and valued in the church at large in the second century.

The often-quoted statement of Jerome (quae et ipsa ab alio quodam sub nomine ejus edita adseritur) must not be taken to imply more knowledge than Jerome gained from Eusebius, and the latter's statement means only that in his time the Syrian and Latin churches had not yet taken up the epistle into their canon. We cannot infer from Jerome that a tradition of the real authorship, or even of the pseudonymity of the epistle, had survived through the second century and come with it to Greek theologians and so to Jerome himself; see above, p. 44.

For the significance of the Epistle of James in the history of early Christian thought it makes not much difference whether it was written by James the Lord's brother about the year 60, or by another Palestinian teacher fifty years later. In either case the place of origin and the kind of Christians whose life the epistle reflects are the same, and the epistle itself shows how little development of Christian thought took place there in those decades. The historical importance of that phase of Christian history lies not in what came out of it but in the traces it reveals of still earlier Palestinian Christianity, and in its testimony to one of the many legitimate forms which Christianity (and in this case very early Christianity) has assumed in its long history.

§ 1. NEW TESTAMENT PERSONS NAMED JAMES.

The N. T. persons bearing the name of James are as follows:

(1) James son of Zebedee and Salome, (elder?) brother of John, included in all four lists of the Twelve, and frequently referred to in the Gospels. He was beheaded by Herod Agrippa I in or before the year 44 A.D. (Acts 12<sup>2</sup>).

(6) James, by whom the Epistle of James claims to have been written (Jas. 1<sup>1</sup>).

(7) James brother of the Judas (Jude v. 1) by whom the Epistle of Jude claims to have been written.

Of these several persons named James, No. 1 (James son of Zebedee) and No. 2 (James son of Alphæus) are certainly distinct individuals, both names being found together in the lists of the Twelve Apostles. Of the career of James son of Alphæus, however, nothing whatever is known, at any rate under that name; and the same is true of No. 4 (James the less) and No. 5 (James [father] of Judas), so that the way is open for identifying one or more of these three with No. 3, James the Lord's brother, a man of note repeatedly mentioned in the Acts and in Paul's epistles. Such a combination, by which Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 were regarded as a single individual, was made by Jerome toward the end of the fourth century, and has prevailed in the western church and with modern Roman Catholic scholars.*

§ 2. THE HISTORY OF OPINION.

The history of opinion with regard to the relationships of James the Lord's brother is of considerable interest.

The most natural interpretation of the terms "brother" (Mt. 12<sup>46</sup>, 47 13<sup>55</sup> 28<sup>10</sup> [?], Mk. 3<sup>31</sup>, 32 6<sup>3</sup>, Lk. 8<sup>19</sup>, 20, Jn. 2<sup>12</sup> 7<sup>3</sup>, 8. 10 20<sup>17</sup> [?], Acts 1<sup>14</sup>, 1 Cor. 9<sup>6</sup>, Gal. 1<sup>19</sup>) and "sister" (Mt. 13<sup>56</sup>, Mk. 6<sup>3</sup>) is undoubtedly to take them as referring to children of Joseph and Mary, younger than Jesus. This is apparently implied† by the statement of Lk. 2<sup>7</sup> (cf. also Mt. 1<sup>25</sup>), that Mary "brought forth her firstborn son (τὸν υἱὸν τὸν πρῶτότοκον)," and this view, often called the "Helvidian," was perhaps the opinion of most persons in the Christian church of the second century. Origen implies that it was so, since he refers to the opposite opinion, which he himself held, as that of "some," in apparent distinction from the majority (Tom. x, 17, on Mt. 13<sup>56</sup>); and Tertullian probably held the Lord's brethren to have been the sons of Joseph and Mary (Contra Marcionem, iv, 19; De carne, 7).

Zahn, Forschungen, vi, p. 319, cf. pp. 309-313, argues that Clement of Alexandria, Strom. vii, 16, 93 f., likewise implies that the mass of simple Christians held to the "Helvidian" view; and holds that that view was maintained by Hegesippus. But the implication of Clement's language does not carry so far as this, and as to the view of Hegesippus there is, in fact, no positive evidence whatever.

By the fourth century, however, this opinion had been reduced to the grade of a heresy. In 376-377, when Epiphanius fulminates against it in a pastoral letter, which he later incorporated in his great work against heresies (Hær. lxxviii, pp. 1034-1057; cf. xxviii, 7; xxix, 1 f.; li, 10; lxvi, 19), it is only to comparatively unimportant or out-of-the-way Christians, such as those in Arabia (or possibly Agaria west of the sea of Azov*), whom he dubbed Antidicomarianitae, or Bonosus of Sardica, or Jovinian that he can refer as instances. The views of all these were condemned as heretical, while Apollinaris of Laodicea, many of whose followers at least are said to have held to this opinion (Epiph. Hæc. lxxvii, 36; lxxviii, 1), was himself a theologian of doubtful repute.† Helvidius himself is an obscure person, known to us solely through Jerome's refutation of a treatise, written at Rome about the year 380, in which he maintained the view that goes by his name. He seems to have been a bold spirit, disaffected toward the current monkish asceticism; using chiefly the statements of the Gospels, he found himself able to produce as older theological authorities only Tertullian and Victorinus of Pettau. He won some followers, but the day for his view had passed and was not to come again until the eighteenth century.

* The identification of James the Lord's brother with James son of Zebedee has occasionally been made, but, as in Iren. Hær. iii, 12<sup>14</sup>, only by a sheer mistake.

† A clear statement of the opposite interpretation of Lk. 2<sup>7</sup> and Mt. 1<sup>25</sup> may be found in Lightfoot, Galatians, pp. 270 ff.

Opposed to this ancient, so-called Helvidian, view of the matter, with its support in the natural implications of Scripture, was another theory, which is first found in certain apocryphal writings, and which, being more in accord with the prevailing sentiment, dominated the church of the fourth century and remains the usual doctrine in the Greek church to the present day. It is often called the "Epiphanian" doctrine, from its most painstaking defender in the fourth century (Epiph. Hæc. lxxvii, 36; lxxviii, 1-24), but its origin lies as far back as the early second century. According to this theory, Mary had no other children than our Lord; the "brothers" and "sisters" were the children of Joseph by a former wife, brought up in the household of Joseph and Mary and reputed Jesus' half-brothers. For the theory no direct evidence is to be found in the N. T.; it seems to derive its origin, and certainly gained its rapid spread, from the feeling of veneration for the Virgin Mary which has produced so vast an overgrowth of legends about her life. This was here conjoined with the far-reaching asceticism which, foreign to Judaism, came with Hellenism into Christian thought and life. Ascetic doctrine speedily supplemented the virgin birth by the perpetual virginity of Mary; hence a first wife had to be assumed as the mother of Joseph's children. The earliest extant statement of this is found in the romance now known as the Protevangelium Jacobi, a fiction of the middle of the second century, in which it is said (ch. 9) that at the time of his betrothal to Mary Joseph was a widower more than eighty years old, with a number of children. A similar statement is said by Origen

† Hilary of Poitiers († 366), Comm. in Matt. 14, calls those who held this opinion homines gravissimi.

(Tom. x, 17, on Mt. 13<sup>35</sup>) to have been contained in the Gospel according to Peter (of date not far from the Protevangelium). It may have been the view of Clement of Alexandria, and was definitely affirmed by Origen himself, although he seems to be aware that it is supported only by these legendary authorities (deliramenta apocryphorum, as Jerome calls them), and that it rests solely on dogmatic or even sentimental grounds. Most of the early writers had no occasion to state by what theory they harmonised the doctrine of the perpetual virginity with the existence of brothers and sisters of the Lord, and therefore cannot be quoted on this question, but when Epiphanius wrote (not long before 380), he was able to assume that his own view was universally held by orthodox Christians. It is, indeed, explicitly stated by Hilary of Poitiers (†368) and "Ambrosiaster" (c. 375), and was the view of Ephraem Syrus,* Gregory of Nyssa, Ambrose, and, in the main, of Chrysostom (who, however, seems later to have inclined toward the equally orthodox theory of Jerome). Later Greek writers, with few exceptions, held to this tradition, and the calendars of the Greek, Syrian, and Coptic churches, which distinguish James the Lord's brother from both of the apostles named James, are evidently in accord with this doctrine of the Apocrypha, of Origen, and of Epiphanius. This is the view accepted by the theologians of the oriental Orthodox churches at the present day.

For the following note on the brethren of Jesus in Russian theological literature I am indebted to Dr. Aurelio Palmieri:

Most of the Russian writers accept the opinion of St. Epiphanius, and hold that Joseph had six sons before his marriage with the Virgin. Among the Russian writers who hold this view are: Bieliaev, O sobornom poslanii ap. Jakova (The Catholic Epistle of St. James) Clenia, held in the Society of the Friends of Ecclesiastical Progress, 1872, vol. i; Bishop Alexis (Novoslov), Vvedenie v poslanie Jakova (Introduction to the Epistle of St. James), ibid. 1877, vol. ii, p. 341; Jaroscevsy, Sobornoe poslanie Sv. Ap. Jakova (The Catholic Epistle of St. James), Kiev, 1901, p. 36; Glubokovsky, Blagoviestie khristianskoi svobody v poslanii Sv. Ap. Pavla k Galatam (The Gospel of Christian Liberty in the Epistle of St. Paul to the Galatians), Petrograd, 1902, pp. 67-69; Orlin, Sobornoe poslanie Jakova (The Catholic Epistle of St. James), Riazan, 1903, p. 2; Glagolev, in Pravoslannaia bogoslovskaja entsiklopedia (Orthodox Theological Encyclopedia), Petrograd, 1901, vol. ii, pp. 1113-1126; Bogdasevsky, ibid. vol. vi, pp. 42-43. One exegete only has accepted the view of Jerome: Theodorovic, Tolkovanie na sobornoe poslanie Sv. Ap. Jakova (Commentary on the Catholic Epistle of St. James), Vilna, 1897.

Two Russian writers have proposed another explanation. They are Prof. Kibalcić, Sv. Ap. Jakov., brat Gospoden (St. James, Apostle and * J. R. Harris, Four Lectures on the Western Text of the New Testament, 1894, p. 37.

Brother of Our Lord), Cernigov, 1882; and the famous historian, Alexis Lebedev, in the review: Duscepolesnoe Ctenie, Moscow, 1903, i, pp. 38-82; iii, 407-425; vi, 215-228; vii, 363-370; x, 235-245; xi, 377-396; xii, 542-552; 1904, i, 91-105; ii, 229-236, and in vol. vi, of Orth. Theol. Ency. According to Lebedev, the N. T. does not state that either the Virgin or Joseph had other sons except Jesus. Therefore the so-called brethren of Jesus were not brethren in the ordinary sense; neither do they belong to a supposed first wife of Joseph. They were only cousins on the side either of Mary or Joseph. The only woman whom the Gospels represent as their mother is Mary, mentioned in the Gospel of John, with the explanatory reference to Clopas, who would be their father. Mary is not the sister of the Virgin, who is not represented as having sisters. She was therefore cousin of Joseph. The Gospels say almost nothing about Clopas; his name is only mentioned by Luke. Nevertheless, we can argue, he was well known in the age of the apostles. A tradition of the second century says that he was the only brother of Joseph. Therefore, Mary of Clopas was a cousin of Joseph and consequently of the Virgin, and she is the mother of the so-called brethren or cousins of Jesus. Prof. A. Lebedev has discussed his opinion in a special work, Bratja Gospodni (1 Cor. 9, 5), Moscow, 1908.

In the western church the influence of Jerome has caused opinion on the subject to have a different history. This active-minded controversialist spent the years 382-385 in Rome, and early in that period, in reply to the then recent work of Helvidius, wrote his treatise, Adversus Helvidium de perpetua virginitate B. Mariae. In this he presented an entirely novel theory, by which he was able to identify James the Lord's brother with James the apostle, son of Alphæus, and so reduce the number of persons named James in the N. T. to two. The theory can be most clearly exhibited by the following table of relationships, as understood by Jerome.

Under Jerome's theory this Judas (Mk. 6<sup>3</sup>) can be identified with the apostle Judas Jacobi, the genitive then indicating the relation of brother, not son. A further possible combination is that which identifies Simon brother of the Lord with Simon the Zealot, one of the Twelve. But neither of these combinations seems to have occurred to Jerome.

Jerome's theory appears to have been wholly original with him, and both his own efforts and those of later Roman Catholic writers to find support for it in earlier ecclesiastical tradition must be deemed to have failed. By the theory the "brothers and sisters" of the Lord are made his cousins, being children of his mother's sister. In order to hold this, it must be assumed that the word "brother" is in these contexts susceptible of such a meaning, an assumption linguistically highly unlikely, if not, as most Protestant scholars would hold, impossible. Apart from this essential foundation-stone the theory rests on the following considerations:

(1) Gal. 1<sup>19</sup> implies that James the Lord's brother was an apostle. Since James son of Zebedee died about 44 A.D., James the Lord's brother must be the same as James son of Alphæus.

(2) Jn. 19<sup>25</sup> may be interpreted as meaning that Mary of Clopas was the sister of the mother of Jesus.

(3) Mk. 15<sup>40</sup> (cf. 15<sup>47</sup> 16<sup>1</sup>) mentions as a witness of the crucifixion a Galilean woman, Mary mother of James the less and Joses, and Jerome identified her with Mary of Clopas.

(4) James the less is identified with James son of Alphæus; for, in the opinion of Jerome, the designation "the less" (minor, ὁ μικρότερος) is added in order to distinguish this James from the more prominent apostle of the same name, James son of Zebedee. In that case Mary of Clopas must have been the wife of Alphæus. What the designation "of Clopas" means, Jerome does not know. He does not suggest the explanation, later current but linguistically unsound, that Clopas and Alphæus represent the same Aramaic name (Chalphai).

From the point of view of monkish asceticism, Jerome's ingenious theory had an advantage over the previously current doctrine represented by Epiphanius. It preserved not only the perpetual virginity of Mary, but also that of Joseph (Adv. Helv. 19). Against it, in spite of its complete lack of traditional authority, could be urged only linguistic and historical objections, while in an age which was much occupied with strict definition of the limits of the canon, the Epiphanian view was subject to the discredit of its close association with antiquated apocryphal legends. Even in the East Jerome's theory seems to have commended itself to Chrysostom (Comm. in Gal. 1<sup>19</sup>), and Theodoret expressly advocated it. In the Latin church it gained the powerful support of Augustine and made a rapid conquest. Cassiodorus (468-562) treats the theory as established, and the western liturgies imply it by providing (unlike the eastern) only one day of commemoration for any James other than the son of Zebedee.

The theologians of the Middle Ages and of succeeding centuries clung to this received view with but few exceptions.* Certain critics of the seventeenth century, indeed, Combefis (†1679), Henschen the Bollandist (†1681), and Richard Simon (†1712; Histoire critique du texte du Nouveau Testament, 1689, ch. 17) argued that James the Lord's brother was not the same person as James son of Alphæus, but they do not seem to have reached a clear and complete theory. In later times also an occasional Roman Catholic writer has taken similar ground, but in general there has been complete adherence to the theory of Jerome, which is now the established tradition of Roman Catholic scholars.

On the Protestant side,† in so far as the question was discussed by the men of the Reformation, the traditional view of Jerome seems to have been retained. Luther (who held fast to the perpetual virginity of Mary) and the Magdeburg Centuries both identified James the Lord's brother with the son of Alphæus; and in spite of some signs presaging the coming confusion of critical theories, these sixteenth-century authorities were followed by the bulk of seventeenth-century Protestants. Striking exceptions were Grotius (†1645), who preferred the Epiphanian solution, and Hammond (†1660). The eighteenth century shows less agreement. Various scholars rejected the Hieronymian tradition; while the eccentric Whiston (†1752), and later, with vastly greater influence, Herder, in his Briefe zweener Brüder Jesu in unserm Kanon, 1775, affirmed the Helvidian doctrine.

In the critical inquiries of the nineteenth century the old opinions have been reaffirmed and ingenious new theories proposed. In the first half of the century the Hieronymian view was held by a large proportion of Protestant writers, at least of the more orthodox type, and from the latter part of the century also such voices were not lacking.‡ The Epiphanian doctrine is also maintained by a few writers, among whom stands the great name of Lightfoot.§ But among Protestant scholars the Helvidian view has increasingly gained adherents, and it is now dominant.

§ 3. THE DECISIVE CONSIDERATIONS.

The reasons for the tendency of modern Protestant scholars to adopt the Helvidian view are sound and do not require long discussion here.

* See for abundant detail on mediæval and modern scholars Meinertz, Jakobusbrief, pp. 203-316.

‡ Smith and Fuller, DB, vol. i, part ii, 1893, p. 1517.

§ Lightfoot, Galatians, pp. 270-272, adopted the Epiphanian view on the ground of Jn. 19<sup>14</sup>. "He holds it unlikely that Mary, if she was the mother of James and the others, should have been 'consigned to the care of a stranger of whose house she becomes henceforth the inmate.'"

(1) Against the Epiphanian view no conclusive objection can be brought, save that no real evidence speaks for it. It is not intrinsically improbable, nor contrary to anything in the N. T., that Joseph should have married, lost his wife, and had a family of children before his betrothal to Mary, but the legends of the Protevangelium Jacobi afford no presumption of trustworthy tradition, and nothing in the N. T. itself is capable of sustaining the weight of the story. The argument from Jn. 19<sup>25</sup>, on which Lightfoot rests his case, is wholly insufficient. In fact, the Epiphanian view has its roots in the dogmatic assumptions of an ascetic theology, or at best in mere pious sentiments which have become alien to modern Protestant thought.

(2) The theory of Jerome, although more frequently advocated among Protestants than the Epiphanian view, is subject to far greater objections.

(a) In the first place it requires the admission that "brother" in the various contexts where it is used can mean "cousin." This is, in fact, impossible and is fatal to the whole theory.*

(b) Jerome's interpretation of Jn. 19<sup>25</sup>, whereby Mary of Clopas is made out to be the sister of the Virgin, is, on the whole, unlikely (see the commentaries, and Zahn, Forschungen, vi, pp. 338 f. 352).

(c) Mary "of Clopas" is more naturally taken as referring to the wife of Clopas, and in that case (since the identification of the names Clopas and Alphæus is not to be accepted) she cannot well have been the wife of Alphæus.

(d) The necessity of inferring from Gal. 1<sup>19</sup> that James the Lord's brother, there referred to, was in Paul's view an apostle is disputed (see the commentaries). But, even if the inference be granted, it is now admitted that from early times and through all the early centuries others than the Twelve were called apostles.

So, for instance, Epiphanius called James an apostle, but denied that he was one of the Twelve. See Zahn, Forschungen, vi, p. 7, note 2, pp. 307 f.; Lightfoot, "The Name and Office of an Apostle," in Galatians, pp. 92-101.

Whether in 1 Cor. 15<sup>7</sup>, even if τοῖς ἀποστόλοις πάντιν means the Twelve only, James is or is not represented as included among them is so doubtful that no argument can properly be drawn from the passage.

(e) The expression Ἰάκωβος ὁ μικρὸς (Mk. 15<sup>40</sup>), on the use of which (Lat. minor) Jerome puts much stress, does not seem to be used of inferiority, in contrast to some "James the Great" among the apostles, but (note that it is positive, not comparative) refers to some personal characteristic, probably of stature.

* Mayors, pp. xxiv f., discusses the arguments adduced; see also Lex. s. v. ἀδελφός, and Lightfoot, Galatians, pp. 261-265.

It thus appears that Jerome's highly speculative combinations crumble under analysis. Against his view speak positively many of the references in the Gospels. The consistent distinction made between the apostles and the brethren of the Lord, and the failure of the evangelists to give any hint that one or two or even three of the Twelve Apostles are identical with certain more or less well-known persons elsewhere referred to in their histories are important arguments. It is difficult to believe, even if Jerome's theory of cousinship were true, that the evangelists could have been aware of such a fact. The repetition of the name Mary for two sisters, the supposed union of two households while evidently the mothers of both were still living, and the complete ignoring, in the narratives, of the second mother's relation to her children, although she is expressly stated (Mk. 15<sup>40</sup>) to have been a member of Jesus' company in Galilee, all these improbabilities combine with the explicit statement of the Gospel of John that Jesus' brethren did not believe on him (Jn. 7<sup>5</sup>) and the clear implication of lack of sympathy with his work found in Mk. 3<sup>21, 31</sup> to make it appear impossible that James the Lord's brother should have been one of the original Twelve Apostles.

For an effective statement of how ill the cousinship hypothesis suits the Gospel narratives, see Mayor<sup>1</sup>, p. xxix. The various difficulties which make Jerome's view impossible are fully presented by Lightfoot, Galatians, pp. 258-265.

In order to maintain the theory of Jerome, which has had wider and longer prevalence among western Christians than any other view, it is necessary to escape the difficulties by supplementary hypotheses of various kinds, such as making an unwarrantable distinction between the James of Gal. 1<sup>19</sup> and the James of Gal. 2<sup>9</sup>, or understanding that the term "the brethren of the Lord" is used by the evangelists with tacit exclusion of the only "brother of the Lord" in whom the early church had any special reason to be interested.*

In fact, we have no reason, apart from dogma or an untrustworthy sentiment, to question that the brothers and sisters of the Lord were children of Joseph and Mary younger than Jesus, and that the impression as to them and their history naturally derived by unsophisticated readers from the four Gospels and the Acts is correct. We know nothing whatever about the relationship to one another of the several persons named James who are brought before us in the Gospels and Acts and the epistles of Paul. There cannot have been fewer than three distinct Jameses; in all probability there were four or five.

§ 4. THE TRADITION CONCERNING JAMES THE LORD'S BROTHER.

(a) The New Testament.

James son of Zebedee, the apostle, died a martyr's death by order of Herod Agrippa I, about 44, and does not seriously come in question as author of the epistle. Of the other persons called James mentioned in the N. T. only James the Lord's brother is sufficiently known to us in his personality and career to make the question of whether he may have been the author of the epistle capable of discussion.

The information furnished by the N. T. about this James is important. In the Gospels he is named only in Mk. 6<sup>3</sup>, Mt. 13<sup>55</sup>, as well known to the inhabitants of Nazareth, but he is to be assumed as included with the other brothers in the attempt to restrain the public activity of Jesus described in Mk. 3<sup>21, 31</sup> = Mt. 12<sup>46</sup>. According to the Gospel of John the brethren of the Lord and his mother accompanied Jesus to Capernaum (Jn. 2<sup>12</sup>), challenged him (Jn. 7<sup>2-9</sup>) to go to Jerusalem and manifest himself to the world (they themselves not believing on him), and proved their own Jewish piety by making the pilgrimage to the feast of tabernacles (Jn. 7<sup>10</sup>). On both these occasions we may fairly infer that James was with the others. At any rate, the evangelist was certainly not aware that James at that time took any different attitude from the rest of the family.

In the command to report the fact of the resurrection to "my brethren," Mt. 28<sup>10</sup>, Jn. 20<sup>17</sup>, the word "brethren" is probably to be taken in the sense of spiritual relationship, but the interpretation is not wholly certain.

After the resurrection we find the mother of Jesus and his brethren joined with the apostles and other Christians in the common life and common Christian faith of the church at Jerusalem (Acts 1<sup>14</sup>), but of their transition to faith in Jesus Christ nothing is told us. James is nowhere expressly mentioned until Acts 12<sup>17</sup>, when he seems to be represented as of chief importance, next to Peter, among the Christians then resident in Jerusalem. In view of the regular custom in the Book of Acts of formally introducing to the reader the personages of the narrative as they are mentioned (Barnabas 4<sup>36</sup>; Stephen and Philip 6<sup>5</sup>; Paul 7<sup>58</sup>; Agabus 11<sup>28</sup>; Silas 15<sup>22</sup>; Timothy 16<sup>1</sup>; Aquila, Priscilla 18<sup>2</sup>; Apollos 18<sup>24</sup>), we may infer from the absence of any such introduction of James that the author knew him to be the Lord's brother and deemed him sufficiently accounted for by Acts 1<sup>14</sup>.

In Acts James appears again at 15<sup>13</sup> and 21<sup>18</sup>. At the conference at Jerusalem concerning the admission of uncircumcised believers into the church, he took with Peter a leading part, and is represented as offering the opinion (Acts 15<sup>13-21</sup>) which was accepted and put into effect by the church of Jerusalem. This decision, fully concurred in by Peter, was joyfully recorded by the writer of Acts as an adequate charter of Gentile liberty (15<sup>21</sup>). Nearly ten years later, at the close of the main period of Paul's missionary activity, James is the head of the church at Jerusalem, still, as before, fully trusted by the Christians of the city—who were “all zealous for the law”—and at the same time heartily well disposed toward the Gentile missionary Paul, to whom he gives a friendly welcome and prudent advice (Acts 21<sup>18-25</sup>). After Paul has fallen into the singular difficulties which ultimately led to his journey to Rome, we hear in Acts no word more either of James or of the Jerusalem Christians.

These notices in Acts are supplemented by certain allusions of Paul. James the Lord's brother, whom Paul says (Gal. 1<sup>19</sup>) that he saw on his first visit to Jerusalem, can be no other than the James who united with Peter and John in assuring Paul of their recognition and fellowship in Gal. 2<sup>9</sup>, and this mutual understanding can hardly be referred to any other occasion than that described in Acts 15. The intricate problems here involved cannot now be discussed. The leading position of James at Jerusalem, and his full identification with the Jewish Christians of that city, are implied in Gal. 2<sup>12</sup> by the words “before that certain came from James.” The other references are 1 Cor. 15<sup>7</sup>, which mentions that James had a vision of the risen Christ, and 9<sup>8</sup>, which implies that the brethren of the Lord were married.

Beyond this the N. T. information does not go. We are justified in referring all these notices to the same James, and our two sources agree in representing him as trusted by the Jewish Christians of Jerusalem, while at the same time friendly to Paul and the Gentile mission. Of his own views, of the direction which his Christian thinking had taken and the distance it had travelled, and of his special type of character and temperament, of his precise attitude toward the problems then arising about the relations of Christianity to the law and customs of the Jews—of all that we learn hardly anything. We may infer that a man accepted by the Jerusalem Christians as their leader cannot have abandoned the practise of the Jewish law; and Gal. 2<sup>12</sup> seems to show James's agreement with the Jerusalem Christians who (in Paul's view) led Peter astray. On the other hand, we are directly informed (Gal. 2<sup>9</sup>) that James admitted the right of Gentiles to become Christians without passing through the gate of circumcision. From the so-called "provisos of James" (Acts 15<sup>20</sup>, <sup>28</sup> 21<sup>25</sup>) much the same inference is to be drawn; they mean that James did not wish to impose the Law upon Gentile Christians.*

(b) Other Tradition.

Outside of the N. T. a considerable amount of tradition about James the Lord's brother has been preserved, and, mingled with much obvious legend, some elements of fact are probably contained in it. The chief sources are the following:

(1) Josephus, Antiquities, xx, 9<sup>1</sup>:

ἄτε δὴ οὖν τοιοῦτος ὢν ὁ Ἄνανος, νομίσας ἔχειν καιρὸν ἐπιτήδειον διὰ τὸ τεθνάναι μὲν Φῆστον, Ἀλβίνον δ' εἶτι κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν ὑπάρχειν, καθίζει συνέδριον κριτῶν καὶ παραγαγὼν εἰς αὐτὸ τὸν ἀδελφὸν Ἰησοῦ τοῦ λεγομένου Χριστοῦ, Ἰάκωβος ὄνομα αὐτῷ, καὶ τινὰς ἑτέρους, ὡς παρανομησάντων κατηγόριαν ποιησάμενος, παρέδωκε λευσθησομένων.

"So Ananus, being that kind of a man, and thinking that he had got a good opportunity because Festus was dead and Albinus not yet arrived, holds a judicial council; and he brought before it the brother of Jesus who was called Christ,—James was his name,—and some others, and on the charge of violating the Law he gave them over to be stoned."

This passage is suspected of being an interpolation by Schürer, GJV<sup>2</sup>, i, § 19, 5, pp. 581 f. (E. Tr. I. ii, pp. 186 f.), and Zahn, Forschungen, vi, pp. 301–305. It is defended as genuine by Mayor<sup>3</sup>, p. lviii, note 2; Lightfoot, Galatians, p. 366, note 2; and E. Schwartz, Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft, iv, 1903, pp. 59 f. The only ground for doubt of the genuineness is that the text of Josephus is known elsewhere to have suffered from Christian interpolation (notably Antiq. xviii, 3<sup>3</sup>, the passage about Jesus Christ), and that Origen refers (Tom. x, 17, on Mt. 13<sup>56</sup>; Contra Celsum, i, 47; ii, 13) to a statement in Josephus, no longer extant, but plainly of Christian origin, to the effect that the murder of James was the occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. This evidence for interpolation is not sufficient; and Josephus's date for the death of James, A.D. 62, must stand, although it contradicts the narrative of Hegesippus.

(2) Hegesippus, quoted by Eusebius, H. e. ii, 23:

"To the government of the church in conjunction with the apostles succeeded the Lord's brother, James,—he whom all from the time of the Lord to our own day call the Just, as there were many named James. And he was holy from his mother's womb; wine and strong drink he drank not, nor did he eat flesh; no razor touched his head, he anointed himself not with oil, and used not the bath. To him alone was it permitted to enter the Holy Place, for neither did he wear wool, but linen clothes. And alone he would enter the Temple, and be found prostrate on his knees beseeching pardon for the people, so that his knees were callous like a camel's in consequence of his continually kneeling in prayer to God and beseeching pardon for the people. Because of his exceeding righteousness (διὰ γὰρ τοὺς τὴν ὑπερβολὴν τῆς δικαιοσύνης) he was called the Just (ὁ δίκαιος) and Oblias, which is in Greek 'Bulwark of the People' (περιοχὴ τοῦ λαοῦ), and Righteousness, as the prophets declare concerning him.

"Therefore certain of the seven sects among the people, already mentioned by me, in the Memoirs, asked him, 'What is the door of Jesus (τίς ἡ θύρα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ)?' and he said that He was the Saviour;—of whom some accepted the faith that Jesus is the Christ. Now the aforesaid sects were not believers either in a resurrection or in One who should come to render to every man according to his deeds; but as many as believed did so because of James. So, since many of the rulers, too, were believers, there was a tumult of the Jews and scribes and Pharisees, for they said there was danger that all the people would expect Jesus the Christ. Accordingly they said, when they had met together with James: 'We entreat thee, restrain the people, since it has gone astray unto Jesus, holding him to be the Christ. We entreat thee to persuade (πεισῶναι) concerning Jesus all those who come to the day of the passover, for we all listen (παραβῆναι) to thee. For we and all the people testify to thee that thou art just and that thou respectest not persons. Do thou therefore persuade the people concerning Jesus, not to go astray, for all the people and all of us listen to thee. Take thy stand therefore on the pinnacle of the Temple, that up there thou mayest be well seen, and thy words audible to all the people. For because of the passover all the tribes have come together, with the gentiles also.'

"So the aforesaid scribes and Pharisees set James on the pinnacle of the Temple, and called to him and said, 'O thou, the Just, to whom we all ought to listen, since the people is going astray after Jesus the crucified, tell us what is the door of Jesus.' And with a loud voice he answered, 'Why do you ask me concerning the Son of Man? and he sitteth himself in heaven on the right hand of the great Power and shall come on the clouds of heaven.' And when many were convinced and gave glory for the witness of James, and said, 'Hosanna to the son of David,' then again the same scribes and Pharisees said to one another, 'We were wrong to permit such a testimony to Jesus; but let us go up and cast him down, that through fear they may not believe him.' And they cried out saying, 'Ho, ho! even the Just has gone astray,' and they fulfilled the Scripture written in Isaiah, Let us away with the Just, because he is troublesome to us; therefore they shall eat the fruits of their doings.

"Accordingly they went up and cast the Just down. And they said one to another, 'Let us stone James the Just,' and they began to stone him, since he was not killed by the fall. But he turned, and knelt down, saying, 'I beseech thee, Lord God Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' And so, as they were stoning him, one of the priests of the sons of Rechab, the son of the Rechabim, mentioned by Jeremiah the prophet, cried out, saying, 'Stop! What are ye doing? The Just prays for you.' And a certain one of them, one of the fullers, taking the club with which he pounds clothes, brought it down on the head of the Just; and so he suffered martyrdom (ἐμαρτύρησεν).

"And they buried him there on the spot, near the Temple, and his monument still remains near the Temple. A true witness (μάρτυς) has he become both to Jews and Greeks that Jesus is the Christ. And immediately Vespasian besieges them (πολιορκαὶ αὐτούς)."

Hegesippus was a Christian probably resident in Palestine and of Jewish origin, but not a Judaizer. In the time of Eleutherus, bishop of Rome (174-189), he wrote his Memoirs (Ἰστορίαι) in five books, of which a few fragments have come down to us.* His work was probably used by Clement of Alexandria and by Epiphanius as well as by Eusebius.

E. Schwartz, Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft, iv, 1903, appears to doubt the use of Hegesippus by Clement (p. 57), and denies that Epiphanius has preserved from Hegesippus anything about James not contained in the fragments in Eusebius (p. 50, note 2). But it seems proved that the work of Hegesippus was accessible to Epiphanius; cf. Lightfoot, S. Clement of Rome, i, 1890, pp. 328 ff.; Zahn, Forschungen, vi, pp. 258 f.; H. J. Lawlor, Eusebiana, Oxford, 1912, pp. 5-18.

The long fragment given above, whether written by Hegesippus or taken over from his source, is plainly composed in order to do honour to James as an ascetic and martyr, who had shared with the apostles in the conduct of the church of Jerusalem. His influence with the mass of the Jews of the city and his title of "the Just" imply that in his eminent piety he was not thought to have departed from Jewish standards, while his sorrow for the sin of his people in rejecting their Messiah recalls the words of Paul in Rom. 9-11. The narrative itself, even when purged of its inner inconsistencies, is a legend, betraying no close contact with the events, and nothing can be drawn from it to add to the picture of James's character and position derived from the N. T. In the bare tradition of a violent death Hegesippus agrees with the account found in Josephus, but nearly all the details of the two accounts vary. In particular Hegesippus's reference to Vespasian seems to imply a date several years later than the year 62 A.D. definitely indicated in Josephus.†

* The fragments are collected, with notes, in Zahn, Forschungen, vi, pp. 228-250; cf. also pp. 250-273.

† See Zahn, Forschungen, vi, pp. 234-235; Einleitung, i, § 5, note 4; he thinks 66 A.D. would suit the statement in Hegesippus.

The source of Hegesippus's information is entirely unknown. The conjecture, often repeated, that he drew it from a violently anti-pauline work, the Steps (or Ascents) of James, said by Epiphanius (Hær. xxx, 16) to have been in circulation among the Ebionites, has almost nothing to commend it.*

From other fragments of Hegesippus (Eusebius, H. e. iii, 11; iv, 22) we learn that James was the first bishop of Jerusalem; and by their aid the following genealogical table can be constructed:

Whether Hegesippus held that Mary was the mother of James and Judas is nowhere indicated. He gives (Eusebius, H. e. iii, 19, 20, 32) an interesting account of the arrest of the grandsons of Judas in the time of Domitian (81-96), on the charge of dangerous dynastic claims as being of the lineage of David, and apparently also on charges connected with their adherence to the "kingdom" of Christ. When the accused proved that they were poor farmers, and that the kingdom of Christ had to do wholly with religious ideas, they were released, and lived until the time of Trajan (98-117), greatly honoured among the churches both as confessors and as kinsmen of the Lord. Symeon is said to have suffered martyrdom in the reign of Trajan, at the age of 120 years.

In an acute essay, "Zu Eusebius Kirchengeschichte. I. Das Martyrium Jakobus des Gerechten," in Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft, iv, 1903, pp. 48-61, E. Schwartz has tried to relieve some of the problems of the long fragment of Hegesippus by removing interpolated words and sentences. This critical process would leave the following:

διαδέχεται τὴν ἐκκλησίαν μετὰ τῶν ἀποστόλων ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ κυρίου Ἰάκωβος, ὁ ὀνομασθεὶς ἐκ τῶν πάντων δικαίος ἀπὸ τῶν τοῦ κυρίου χρόνων μέχρι καὶ ἡμῶν, ἐπεὶ πολλοὶ Ἰάκωβοι ἐκαλοῦντο, οὗτος δὲ ἐκ κοιλίας μητρὸς αὐτοῦ ἅγιος ἦν, οἶνον καὶ σίκερα οὐκ ἔπιεν, οὐδὲ ἔμφυχον ἔφαγεν, Schwartz's theory is that Eusebius found the passage already interpolated, with additions partly due to ignorance, literary ineptitude, and pious love of embellishment, partly designed to combine the legend of Hegesippus and the tradition found in Josephus. To the interpolator is supposed to be due the confusing introduction of the scribes and Pharisees as the chief enemies of James after the [Sadducean] “rulers” had begun to be affected by his preaching. The details of Schwartz's analysis are worked out with great skill, and the theory in its main outlines is highly plausible, although in the nature of the case it is incapable of demonstration.

(3) The Gospel according to the Hebrews, quoted by Jerome, De viris illustribus, 2 :

Evangelium quoque quod appellatur secundum Hebræos et a me nuper in græcum sermonem latinumque translatus est, quo et Origenes sæpe

uitur, post resurrectionem salvatoris refert: "Dominus autem cum dedisset sindonem servo sacerdotis, ivit ad Jacobum et apparuit ei; iuraverat enim Jacobus se non comedurum panem ab illa hora qua biberat calicem dominus (v. l. domini) donec videret eum resurgentem a dormientibus." Rursusque post paululum: "Adferite, ait dominus, mensam et panem." Statimque additur: "Tulit panem et benedixit et fregit et dedit Jacobo Justo et dixit ei: Frater mi, comede panem tuum, quia resurrexit filius hominis a dormientibus."

This much-discussed fragment was probably taken over from some work of Origen, in spite of Jerome's explicit claim to have translated it from the Hebrew.* The Gospel according to the Hebrews appears to have been current in Greek. Hegesippus is our earliest witness to its existence (Eusebius, H. e. iv, 22<sup>b</sup>); how much earlier it was written is unknown.† It was the gospel used by the Ebionites (Eusebius, H. e. iii, 25<sup>b</sup> 27<sup>a</sup>), or Jewish Christians, and may have contained trustworthy tradition, although the few extant fragments do not greatly commend it. Jerome seems to have confounded it with the Hebrew Matthew, which he says he saw at Beroëa and also in the library at Cæsarea, and he has thereby brought great confusion into modern study of the subject.‡

The appearance of the risen Christ to James the Just is to be identified with that mentioned by Paul (1 Cor. 15<sup>7</sup>); but in contradiction to Paul the Gospel according to the Hebrews claimed for James, the head of the Jewish Christians, the honour of the first resurrection appearance, which Paul says belonged to Peter.

(4) Other Apocryphal Gospels.

The Protevangelium Jacobi, 8, 9, 17<sup>a</sup>, which claims (25<sup>1</sup>) to have been written by James soon after the death of Herod, represents Joseph as an elderly widower with sons (but no daughters) at the time when Mary, a girl of twelve, is committed to his protection. This agrees with what Origen says (Comm. in Matt. t. x, 17) as to the statement of "the Book of James" (ἡ βιβλος Ἰακώβου), and at least chs. 1-17 of the Protevangelium are therefore to be regarded as written in the second century.

Other apocryphal infancy-gospels contain similar representations, in many or all cases doubtless derived from the Protevangelium or its source. So, among the documents collected by Tischendorf (Evangelia apocrypha, 1876), the Gospel of Pseudo-Matthew, 8<sup>3</sup> 4; Gospel of the Nativity of Mary, 8 (here Joseph is grandævus, but not stated to be a widower); History of Joseph the Carpenter, 2, 4, 11; (Arabic) Gospel of the Infancy, 35. In several of the Apocryphal Gospels there is a story of how James, bitten by a viper, was miraculously healed by the boy Jesus.*

(5) The Recognitions of Clement.†

This work is extant in the Latin translation made by Rufinus c. 398, from a Greek original, certainly written not much earlier than the year 300 and probably the composition of a post-nicene Arian writer later than 350. The comparison of the Recognitions with the largely parallel material of the Greek work known as the Homilies of Clement (likewise Arian and post-nicene, of about the same date) shows that both are mainly derived from a common source, an edifying but fictitious Clementine romance compiled from earlier sources between 225 and 300. This romance had the form, preserved also in the later compilations, of a report made by Clement of Rome (under instructions from Peter) to James, bishop of Jerusalem, concerning Clement's experiences in the company of Peter on a journey along the Syrian coast of the Mediterranean from Cæsarea to Antioch. To the romance may well have belonged the letter of Clement to James, now prefixed to the Homilies.

Back of this lost romance lie its own sources, one of which was an anti-pauline Jewish-Christian gnostic account of the preaching of Peter (Κηρύγματα Πέτρου‡), written about 200 or earlier and purporting to have been sent by Peter to James. From this comes the letter of Peter to James also prefixed to the Homilies. The other main source belonging to this stage was perhaps a book of Acts of Peter, written early in the third century, in which James played no part.

In all this literature the hero of the action is Peter, but both of the extant works are, as it were, dedicated to James, and the same was plainly true of more than one of their predecessors. James is represented as bishop of Jerusalem, and is called "bishop of bishops" and archbishop. He appears as the leading Christian authority of the East, by whom all teachers must be accredited (Rec. iv, 35), just as Peter was the leading Christian authority of the West. Indeed, even Peter stands in a certain subordination to him. It is assumed (e. g. Ep. of Clement to James, preface; Rec. i, 43 f.) that James was not one of the Twelve Apostles.

In Recognitions, i, 66-71, a protracted public discussion between James, standing at the top of the steps of the temple, and Caiaphas leads to a riot in which James is hurled from the steps and badly injured. The narrative occurs in a section which is distinguished in various ways from the surrounding material, and a certain resemblance to the long fragment from Hegesippus quoted above has led to the theory that both drew from a common source. But the further theory that this source was the lost Ebionite Steps of James (Ἀναβαθμοὶ Ἰακώβου) mentioned by Epiphanius (Hær. xxx, 16) is not probable.

The Clementine literature confirms and makes more vivid the other representations of the important and influential position occupied by James, but makes no positive addition to our knowledge about him.

(6) Other Tradition.

(a) That James was the first bishop of Jerusalem was expressly stated by Hegesippus, as noted above, but this writer did not indicate from whom the appointment to this office came.

Hegesippus ap. Eus. H. e. ii, 23<sup>4</sup> διαδέχεται δὲ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν μετὰ τῶν ἀποστόλων ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ κυρίου Ἰάκωβος, see also Eus. H. e. iv, 22<sup>4</sup>, where Hegesippus expressly describes Symeon, who was made bishop on the death of James, as second in the succession.

Clement of Alexandria states that Peter, James (presumably the son of Zebedee), and John, being the apostles who had received special honour from the Saviour, chose James the Just to be bishop of Jerusalem. This representation is followed by Eusebius and Jerome. In the Recognitions of Clement and in Epiphanius the statement appears that James was ordained bishop by the Lord himself.

Jerome, De viris illustr. 2, Jacobus . . . post passionem domini statim ab apostolis Hierosolymorum episcopus ordinatus. . . . Triginta itaque annis Hierosolymae rexit ecclesiam, id est usque ad septimum Neronis annum.

* Eusebius elsewhere repeatedly refers to James as having been bishop, H. e. iii, 5, 7, 11; iv, 5; vii, 19.

Recog. Clem. i, 43, ecclesia domini in Hierusalem constituta copiosissime multiplicata crescebat per Jacobum qui a domino ordinatus est in ea episcopus, rectissimis dispensationibus gubernata.

Epiphan. Hær. lxxviii, 7, καὶ πρῶτος οὗτος [sc. ὁ Ἰάκωβος] ἐληφε τὴν καθέδραν τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς ᾧ πεπίστευκε κύριος τὸν θρόνον αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς πρῶτῳ.

The N. T. says nothing about a bishop at that time in Jerusalem, and the attribution of the title to James is probably an anachronism, in spite of the episcopal throne which Eusebius (H. e. vii, 19) says was preserved at Jerusalem and shown to visitors down to his own time.

(b) From Clement of Alexandria one other noteworthy statement about James is preserved by Eusebius, H. e. ii, 1<sup>4</sup>:

"And he [viz. Clement of Alexandria] further says this about him [viz. James] in the seventh book of the same work [viz. the Hypotyposes]:

"To James the Just and John and Peter after the resurrection the Lord committed Knowledge (παρέδωκε τὴν γνῶσιν); they committed it to the other apostles; and the other apostles to the seventy, one of whom was Barnabas. Now there were two Jameses, one, the Just, who was thrown from the pinnacle and beaten to death by a fuller's club, and one who was beheaded."

(c) The account of James given by Epiphanius in Hær. xxix, 3-4, lxxviii, 7-14, is derived mainly from the long fragments of Hegesippus found in Eusebius (to whom direct reference is made, Hær. xxix, 3-4) and from the Protevangelium Jacobi or some other apocryphal gospel. A few touches, not of great importance, are added either from Epiphanius's own invention or possibly from independent knowledge of the Memoirs of Hegesippus. Thus, besides stating that James was appointed bishop by the Lord, Epiphanius says that he was a priest and wore the "petalon" (the ornament of the high-priest's mitre, Ex. 28<sup>38 f.</sup> 29<sup>6</sup>), and went once a year into the Holy of Holies (as if he were the officiating high priest).* He also adds to the description of his asceticism that he went barefoot and was unmarried; tells how once his prayer for rain in a time of drought was immediately answered; and says that he died about twenty-four years after the ascension of the Saviour, and at the age of ninety-six.

(d) The burial-place of James was said by Hegesippus (ap. Eus. H. e. ii, 23<sup>18</sup>) to have been still marked in his day by a monument near the temple (παρὰ τῷ ναῷ). In the time of Jerome another site for his grave was indicated on the Mount of Olives (Jer. De vir. ill. 2, quidam e nostris in monte Oliveti eum conditum putant sed falsa eorum opinio est). For later legends as to his grave, see Zahn, Forschungen, vi, pp. 233 f. His body is said to have been transferred by the Emperor Justin II (565-578) and his consort Sophia to the new church of St. James in Constantinople.*

(e) Acts of James have not come down to us. Andreas of Crete († 720) wrote a tract, "On the Life and Martyrdom of the Holy Apostle James the Brother of God," published by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, Ἀνάλεκτα Ἱεροσολυμιτικῆς Σταχυολογίας, i, Petrograd, 1891, pp. 1-14, but it adds nothing to tradition otherwise known. It was the source used by Symeon Metaphrastes (tenth century) for his well-known memoir, Ἐκδόμημα εἰς τὸν ἅγιον Ἰάκωβον, ἀπόστολον καὶ ἀδελφόν, Acta Sanctorum, May 1 (Migne, Patrologia græca, vol. cxv, cols. 199-218).

(f) As mentioned above, the Protevangelium Jacobi claims James as its author. Also an Ebionite work, entitled Steps of James, referred to by Epiphanius (Hær. xxx, 16), contained utterances of James against the temple and the sacrifice and the fire on the altar. The same book seems to have included false stories intended to throw discredit on the apostle Paul. What the term "Steps" meant in the title of the book is not clear.

The Naassenes, a syncretistic sect described by Hippolytus, had a book containing their doctrine as transmitted by James the Lord's brother to Mariamne (Hippolytus, Philosophumena, v, 7; x, 9).

(g) The ancient liturgy proper to the churches of Syria, now obsolete except on the feast of St. James, and then used in a few localities only, is known as the Liturgy of St. James. This name is first attested in 692, and applies to both the Greek and the Syrian form of the liturgy.

See L. Duchesne, Christian Worship, Its Origin and Evolution<sup>3</sup>, 1904, pp. 65-69; F. E. Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western, i, Oxford, 1896.

St. James the Lord's brother is commemorated in the Greek church on October 23, and the calendars of the Greek and other Oriental churches provide separate days for James the Lord's brother and James (son of Alphæus) the apostle. In the western church various days have been observed, but all except May 1 have gradually been eliminated, while, under the guidance of Jerome's theory of identification, the separate feast of James son of Alphæus (formerly celebrated on June 22) has also been dropped. For reasons which do not appear Philip and James were early associated together, and May 1 is now the day of St. Philip and St. James in the Roman and Anglican churches.

May 1 is found assigned to "James" in the Martyrologium Hieronymianum (sixth century). The Venerable Bede (†735) attests the date in his metrical martyrology:

mirifico Maias venerantur honore calendas,* and it has been general in western calendars.

§ 2. VERSIONS.

The ancient versions which are, or might be, useful for the criticism and history of the text of James are the following:

- (a) Egyptian Versions.
- (b) Ethiopic Version.
- (c) Syriac Versions.

(d) Armenian Version.

(e) Latin Versions.

(1) Sahidic.

This version, widely used in Upper Egypt, is now held to be older than the Bohairic of Lower Egypt, and to have been made in the period 200-350 A.D. Existing Mss. of some portions are thought to date from the fourth century. The version contains an important infusion of "western" readings; the later Mss. show much textual corruption and alteration.

(2) Minor Egyptian Versions.

Akin to the Sahidic are:

(a) Akhmimic. Perhaps made in the fourth century, but soon supplanted by the Sahidic. The oldest Mss. are attributed to the fourth century.

London, Brit. Mus. 5299 (1), formerly Flinders Petrie (Crum, 492; Gregory, 2), 300-350 A.D. (so Crum; Hyvernat assigns to cent. v or vi), Jas. 4<sup>12, 13</sup>. Text in W. E. Crum, Coptic Manuscripts Brought from the Fayyum, 1893, pp. 2 f.; see also Crum, Catalogue of the Coptic Manuscripts in the British Museum, 1905.

The text of this fragment corresponds to a Greek text as follows:
 κριτης. εις δε εστιν ο νομοθετης και . . . πορευομεθα εις τηδε την πό-λιν και ποιησωμεν ενιαυτον ενα. It agrees entirely in text, and substantially in translation, with the Sahidic of Woide.

Strassburg, University Library, cent. v or vii-viii, James, complete from 1<sup>13</sup>. Text in F. Röscher, Bruchstücke des ersten Clemensbriefes, 1910.

(b) Middle Egyptian (Memphis and the Fayyum).

Of this version the text of Jas. 1<sup>25, 26</sup> 2<sup>1, 2</sup>, 5 is published by Crum, Catalogue of the Coptic Manuscripts in the British Museum, 1905, p. 244, from Brit. Mus. or. 4923 (5); Crum, 509.

(3) Bohairic ("Coptic").

This version, still in ecclesiastical use among the Coptic Christians, is probably the latest of the Egyptian versions. It was probably made not earlier than 400 A.D. (F. Robinson), perhaps after the year 518 (Burkitt), or even as late as 700 (Leipoldt, op. cit. p. 311).* The oldest Mss. (fragments of

Eph. and 2 Cor.) date from the ninth and tenth centuries. The oldest continuous texts are of the twelfth century.* It came under the influence of the Byzantine Greek text, and has had no less extensive and eventful a textual history than the Latin and the Syriac translations (Leipoldt, op. cit. p. 297). In James its text clearly belongs with that of B<sup>8</sup>AC and shows no kinship to the Antiochian group KLPS. But it betrays no special relation to any particular one of the older uncials of the group to which it belongs. Tischendorf drew his references to the epistles from the unsatisfactory edition and translation of Wilkins, 1716.

(b) Ethiopic Version.

R. H. Charles, art. "Ethiopic Version," in HDB, i, 1898.

F. Prätorius, art. "Bibelübersetzungen, äthiopische," in Herzog-Hauck, PRE<sup>3</sup>, vol. iii, 1897.

The Ethiopic version was made in cent. iv-v (Dillmann) or cent. v-vi (Guidi); whether originally translated from the Greek or the Sahidic is disputed, but in any case it was later corrected from the Arabic version. It is preserved in many Mss., some of which, containing the Catholic epistles, are as old as the fifteenth century. The editions, whether the Roman edition, 1548 (reprinted in the London Polyglot), or the still more unsatisfactory one edited by Thomas Pell Platt, London, 1830, are uncritical and unreliable, and the citations of this version in Tischendorf's apparatus, being made from them, must be used with caution.

(c) Syriac Versions.

E. Nestle, art. "Syriac Versions," in HDB, iv, 1902.

W. Wright, art. "Syriac Literature," in Encyclopædia Britannica, xxii, 1887, republished as A Short History of Syriac Literature, 1894.

* Brit. Mus. Curzon Catena, dated 889 A.D., is probably translated directly from a Greek catena on the Gospels.

(1) Peshitto.

This translation was probably made after 411 A.D., under the direction of Rabbula, bishop of Edessa (411-435),* and, so far as known, is the earliest Syriac translation of James.

The British Museum has a Ms. containing James from the fifth or sixth century (Add. 14,470; Greg. 13<sup>vv</sup>), and several Mss. of the sixth century and of the sixth or seventh century; but the analogy of Syriac Mss. of the Gospels indicates that the text will not be found to differ substantially from that of the printed editions, of which that by Leusden and Schaaf, 1708, was used by Tischendorf.

(2) Harclean.

A revision of the Peshitto in accordance with Greek Mss. of the "Antiochian" type was made in 508 A.D. for Philoxenus, bishop of Mabug; but no Ms. has been identified as containing the Epistle of James in this version. The Philoxenian revision was again revised, with excessive literalness of translation, in 616 at Enaton, near Alexandria, by Thomas of Harkel, bishop of Mabug, who followed a different type of Greek text and supplied marginal variants from Greek Mss. Of the many Mss. of this Harclean revision one, containing James, is said to be of the seventh century (Rome, Vat. syr. 266; Gregory, 25<sup>vv</sup>). The edition of J. White, 1778-1803, prints James from a Ms. of the eleventh (?) century.

(3) Palestinian ("Jerusalem").

F. C. Burkitt, "Christian Palestinian Literature," in JTS, ii, 1901, pp. 174-185.

This version, made directly from the Greek, but under the influence of the Peshitto, is in a dialect of Aramaic similar to that of the Samaritans and the Palestinian Jews, and was probably made not earlier than the sixth century (reign of Justinian) for the use of certain communities of Malkite Christians in Palestine, some of whom were afterward settled in Egypt. The earliest Ms. is of the seventh century. The text on which the version rests is of a mixed character.

*That the evidence which formerly led to the assignment of an earlier date for the Peshitto is without value has now been decisively shown by F. C. Burkitt, S. Ephraim's Quotations from the Gospel (TS, vii), 1901.

Jas. 1<sup>1-12</sup> in this dialect has been printed from a lectionary of the twelfth (?) century, probably from Egypt, by Mrs. Agnes S. Lewis, A Palestinian Syriac Lectionary (Studia Sinaitica, vi), 1897, pp. 34-35, cf. p. lxv.

(d) Armenian Version.

F. C. Conybeare, art. "Armenian Version," in HDB, i, 1898.

H. Gelzer, art. "Armenien," in Herzog-Hauck, PRE<sup>3</sup>, vol. ii, 1897.

Said to have been originally translated (c. 400) from the Syriac and revised after 431 by Greek Mss. brought from Constantinople. The best edition is that of Zohrab, Venice, 1805, from which the readings in Tischendorf's apparatus are drawn. It is based chiefly on a Ms. dated 1310. Mss. of the whole N. T. of the twelfth or thirteenth century are preserved at Venice.

The texts of ff and m are reprinted in Mayor, pp. 3-27. For the text of s, Mayor's reprint of Belsheim's edition is insufficient, and White's or Bick's edition must be consulted.

Some Old Latin readings are perhaps to be found in the text of James in the Vulgate Codices Toletanus and Harleianus 1772.

One quotation from James is found in the commentaries of Ambrosiaster, who on Gal. 5<sup>10</sup> cites Jas. 5<sup>20</sup>. The text is doubtless Old Latin, but is substantially identical with that of the Vulgate; see A. Souter, A Study of Ambrosiaster (Texts and Studies, vii), 1905, p. 197.

The text of the Latin Vulgate in James is best preserved in the Cod. Amiatinus (A), c. 700, and Cod. Fuldensis (F), c. 540, from which the text as given in the authoritative Editio Clementina, Rome, 1592, 1593, 1598,* differs in many points. The text of A with the variants of F is to be found in a sufficiently accurate reprint in Mayor, pp. 3-27.

(3) Textual Relations.

The extraordinarily numerous variations found in the text of the Old Latin Bible were due largely to differences of local Latin usage and to caprice, but probably also in some measure to learned revisions effected with the aid of Greek copies and similar to that which produced the Vulgate.

In James, ff is substantially a pure Old Latin text, not mixed with Vulgate readings.† That the copy which was corrected in order to make the Vulgate was closely akin to it is shown by the abundant agreement of ff and Vg, not only in vocabulary, but especially in the structure of sentences and the order of words.‡ With this inference corresponds the fact that Chromatius of Aquileia († c. 406), the friend of Jerome, uses the Latin version of James found in ff,§ and that the only probable allusion to James in the writings of Ambrose agrees with ff against Vg. The date of the version found in ff is thus not later than cent. iv. Sanday thinks ff a local recension of north Italian origin.||

Heer, Die versio latina des Barnabasbriefes, 1908, pp. xlv f., infers that the translation of Barnabas contained in the Codex Corbeiensis was made after Tertullian and before Cyprian and Novatian, and points out that in the version of James the use of salvare, together with other indications, suggests a somewhat late date.

The Latin version found in m (Speculum Pseudo-Augustini) is substantially that of Priscillian (Spain, †385).* It stands further removed from both ff and Vg than they do from each other, but presents complicated relationships to these two. It is believed by Sanday to represent "a late African text," that is, "an African base . . . corrupted partly by internal development and partly by the admission of European readings." † There is no sufficient evidence that ff and m rest upon two independent translations of James into Latin.‡ On the contrary, the same Greek text underlies the two, and we must assume a single original translation, which has been modified in the interest of Latin style and local usage, and not in order to conform it to current Greek Mss. Since sufficient time has to be allowed for the divergence of ff and m before the latter part of the fourth century, it follows that the original translation of James into Latin was made certainly not later than 350.§

That James was translated into Latin separately from other books (and probably later) is indicated by the peculiarities of the version itself,|| by the unique phenomenon of its inclusion with patristic treatises in Codex Corbeiensis (ff),** and also by the complaint of Augustine †† at the unusual badness of the translation of James, and the fact that Cassiodorus, who in other cases took the Old Latin as the basis of comment in his Com-

The Latin version found in s is so close to Vg that it is a question whether s ought not to be classed as a Vulgate Ms. (so Hort, "Appendix," p. 83). It differs from Codex Amiatinus of the Vg scarcely more than Codex Fuldensis does, but is nearer to A than to F. On the ground of resemblances to the Latin version used by Fulgentius of Ruspe († 533) and Facundus of Ermione († c. 570) White surmises that the elements in s which are divergent from the Vulgate "represent a stream of late African text." †

Jerome probably revised the Latin version of the Acts and epistles in 384-385, as he had that of the Gospels in 383, but his revision of the former books was superficial and imperfect; it "does not represent the critical opinion of Jerome, even in the restricted sense in which this is true of the text of the Gospels." ‡ It is noteworthy that in Jerome's own quotations from James he does not follow the Vulgate.§

The Greek text underlying ff and m was of the same type as that of the older Greek uncials, and resembled B more closely than does any extant Greek Ms. (not excluding even ℵ). The Vulgate shows traces of the influence of Greek readings different from the text of ff, m, but hardly ever agreeing with KLPS.

§ 3. USE OF THE AUTHORITIES.||

Since most of the important variants were in existence as early as the fourth century,** it is evident that the value of the documents is not mainly to be determined by their date, or even by the date of the recension which they may represent.

|| The following observations, it should be noted, are intended to apply only to the Epistle of James, where by reason of the late emergence of the epistle into use the problems have a peculiar character. Detailed evidence for the conclusions here stated will be found in J. H. Ropes, "The Text of the Epistle of James," JBL, xxviii, 1909, pp. 103-129.

** The isolated variants of the minuscules (variants many of which, even when known, are very properly left unmentioned in Tischendorf's apparatus) do not in most cases come seriously into question.

Ancient documents must be treated like modern editions; their worth depends on the materials available for making them and on the soundness of the principles or tastes which guided their formation. The main task of textual criticism is to discover the character of those principles or tastes.

In the text of James the chief groups that can at present be treated as distinct critical entities are B ff, A 33, KLPS al. (the "Antiochian recension"). Of these the text of KLPS al. proves on examination to contain no distinctive readings which commend themselves as probably original. This is not due to its lateness, but to the systematic preference of its editor (or of a series of editors and copyists) for textual improvements already in existence, which had been made at various times in the interest of "lucidity and completeness." We are therefore tolerably safe in refusing to accept its testimony in the comparatively few cases where its distinctive readings might in themselves have some degree of plausibility. The peculiar common element of A 33 is also due to emendation.

On the other hand, the text of B ff, while not absolutely free from obviously emended readings, proves to be much freer from them than is that of any other document. Moreover, the text of B shows less trace of emendation than that of ff. Accordingly, if due precaution is taken against admitting unsupported errors due to an eccentricity of B, it is a sound rule that in cases where "internal evidence of readings" is not decisive the reading of B should be followed. Since, however, B is by no means free from error and even emendation, positive evidence from "transcriptional" or other internal probability will outweigh the authority of B.

The use of the witnesses other than B is thus twofold. First, when they disagree with B, their readings may sometimes commend themselves by their internal character as superior. Secondly, when they agree with B, they serve as guarantee that the reading of B is not due to the idiosyncrasy of that Ms., and also, by affording evidence of the wider currency of the reading, they somewhat strengthen confidence in it.

The statement of Hort ("Introduction," p. 171), which seems to mean that the authorities for the Catholic epistles stand in order of excellence B<sup>N</sup><sub>33</sub>CAP, is substantiated (at any rate for the uncials) in the Epistle of James.

The rule above stated cannot be presumed to yield a perfect text. The result will probably include some undetectable errors. It will, however, certainly contain fewer emended readings than would be introduced by following the guidance of any other document or group of documents; and this is the chief requisite of a sound text, since in texts of the N. T. false readings, if supported by more than one document, are much more frequently due to emendation than to accident.

F. C. Burkitt, The Rules of Tyconius (TS, iii), 1894, p. cxviii: "The general character of the 'Neutral' text so often represented by B alone stands on a sure basis, but B may here and there desert that text by an interpolation or by a substitution which may not necessarily be self-betraying.

"These, however, are but secondary considerations compared with the general result, that in the Old Testament as in the New the text of our oldest Mss. as a whole is proved by the evidence of the versions to be immensely superior to the later eclectic texts commonly used in the Greek-speaking churches from the middle of the fourth century. These later revisions sometimes preserve valuable fragments of older texts which would otherwise have been lost altogether, but it is for such fragments alone that these recensions are valuable, and not for their continuous text."

Some further progress in the solution of the problem of the text of James is to be expected through the accumulation of new materials and the verification and digestion of the great work of H. von Soden. The textual notes printed in this Commentary on the several verses of James are based in the main on Tischendorf's apparatus. The writer hopes to carry through an exhaustive study of the text of James at a later time.

III. HISTORY OF THE EPISTLE IN THE CHURCH.

The earliest express references to the Epistle of James are those found in Origen, and the epistle seems to have come into general use and esteem only after his time and through the influence of Alexandria. No one of the Apostolic Fathers, of the Christian writers of the second century, or of the heretics of the same period betrays, in the present writer's opinion, acquaintance with James. From the third century the epistle begins to be quoted, and to be included in the canon, first of all in the Greek church, then in the Latin, and finally in the Syrian church. Among the Greeks the process seems to have been complete before the time when Eusebius wrote his history (c. 324). In the West at the close of the fourth century, Jerome and Augustine mark, and did much to effect, the final acceptance of the book as sacred Scripture. In Syria the official translation of the N. T. included the Epistle of James after 412 (or a little later), and it was used by representative theologians of the Antiochian school somewhat earlier; yet for a long time, and even as late as the sixth century, influential church leaders, especially those in close relations with the Nestorians, refused to admit it into their canon. The extraordinary influence of Alexandrian thought on the world is instructively exhibited in this one small instance of a vast pervasive process.

Much of the necessary material may be found assembled in Mayor, ch. 2; see also Charteris, Canonicity, 1880, pp. 292-300; Meinertz, Jakobusbrief (Biblische Studien, x), 1905; Zahn, Einleitung, i, 1906, § 7, notes 4-6; The New Testament in the Apostolic Fathers, by a Committee of the Oxford Society of Historical Theology, Oxford, 1905; and the general works on the history of the canon. Zahn's statements in the Einleitung are too much influenced by Mayor, and are less trustworthy than his earlier judgments. On the history of opinion as to the author of the epistle, see above, pp. 54-59.

§ 1. ABSENCE OF MENTION IN WRITERS BEFORE ORIGEN.

Clement of Rome.—A great number of passages from the epistle of Clement have been supposed to show acquaintance with James, and are conveniently gathered together by Mayor.* In some of these noteworthy coincidences of phrase occur, as in chs. 13, 23, 30, 38, 46, and in the references to Abraham in chs. 10, 17, 31, and to Rahab in ch. 12. But these are not ideas, nor forms of expression, which are original with James, and the likeness is not sufficient to prove literary dependence, but only similar literary associations.

Lightfoot, S. Clement of Rome<sup>2</sup>, 1890, i, p. 96, speaks somewhat guardedly of the recognition of James's "type of Apostolic teaching," although in fact he believed (i, p. 397, cf. ii, pp. 97, 100) that Clement knew and used our epistle. Westcott, CNT, 1896, p. 49, thinks that Clement used James, as does Zahn, GnK, 1889, i, pp. 962 f. Holtzmann, Einleitung, 1892, p. 91, regards the question as indeterminable. Weiss, Einleitung, 1889, pp. 36, 49, does not ascribe to Clement any acquaintance with James. That there is no sufficient evidence of use by Clement is also the decided opinion of the Oxford Committee, NTAF, 1905, pp. 137 f.

Of the other Apostolic Fathers there is no adequate evidence that 2 Clement of Rome, the Epistle of Barnabas, Ignatius, Polycarp, the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, or the Epistle to Diognetus, used or knew James. The same is true of Justin Martyr and of the Apologists of the second century.

The Oxford Committee, NTAF, p. 128, while admitting a "general similarity . . . in the spirit of [2 Clement's and James's] teaching," hold that the passages in 2 Clement "are insufficient to give positive evidence in favour of literary dependence."

Polycarp ὁ καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι δὲ εὐσπλαγχοὶ, εἰς πάντας ἐλεήμονες, ἐπιστρέφοντας τὰ ἀποπεπλανημένα, ἐπισκεπτόμενοι πάντας ἀσθενεῖς, μὴ ἀμελοῦντας χήρας ἢ ὀρφανοῦ ἢ πένητος . . . ἀπεχόμενοι πάσης ὀργῆς, προσωποληψίας, κρίσεως ἀδίκου, is noteworthy as combining a great many of the topics treated in James, but there is no sufficient indication of direct literary connection. The same is to be said of Epistle of Barnabas 20. Most of the parallels from the Apostolic Fathers and from Justin are conveniently collected in Mayor, ch. 2; see also NTAF.

Hermas.—The Shepherd presents a great number of resemblances to James, and in some cases the similarity extends to a series of parallels in a longer context. Close resemblance, however, is not found to any of those phrases and sentences of the epistle which are unmistakably original whether in thought or expression (e. g. Jas. 2<sup>14-26</sup>), and in most of the parallel passages the difference of spirit and language is noteworthy. Hence it is altogether likely that both writers are independently using a mass of religious and moral commonplaces, probably characteristic of the Jewish hortatory preaching with which both were plainly familiar. That these resemblances are so numerous, while yet no one of them is conclusive, does not provide (as it has often been asserted to do) cumulative evidence of literary dependence; on the contrary, it makes the opposite explanation all the more probable. There may be, indeed, a common dependence on some single current book of practical religion, but the existence of such a book is not proved; a common background would suffice to account for the facts, and that need not imply that the two authors lived in the same locality or in neighbouring places. The probability is that Hermas did not know the Epistle of James, and that there is no direct literary connection between the two writings.

The view maintained in the text seems to me well established, but is not that of most scholars. Zahn (Der Hirt des Hermas, 1868, pp. 396-409; GnK, 1889, i, p. 962; Einleitung<sup>2</sup>, 1906, § 7, note 5) holds the dependence of Hermas on James to be certain, and with him agree Weiss, Einleitung<sup>2</sup>, 1889, p. 37, and Westcott, CNT<sup>1</sup>, 1896, pp. 204, 207. Conversely, Holtzmann, Einleitung<sup>2</sup>, 1892, pp. 92, 336, held, as have others, that James was probably dependent on Hermas. The Oxford Committee, 1905, p. 113, however, are in doubt, saying with regard to Hermas, "we should be hardly justified in placing the Epistle higher than Class C" (their "lower degree of probability"); and Leipoldt, GnK, i, 1907, p. 189, deems Hermas only "perhaps" dependent. Harnack, CaL, i, 1897, p. 485, and Jülicher, Einleitung<sup>2</sup>, 1906, p. 193, have perceived that there is no adequate evidence of literary dependence on either side. For references to many judgments of scholars, see Meinertz, Jakobusbrief, 1905, pp. 86-90.

The parallels between James and Hermas are elaborately treated by Zahn, Der Hirt des Hermas, 1868, pp. 396-409; the more important are carefully discussed in NTAF, Oxford, 1905; and a very full, though not quite complete, series is cited in Mayor, l. c.

The parallel which is perhaps most striking is found in Hermas, Mand. ix, where the subject is a warning against διψυχία. The exhortation to pray to the Lord without διψυχία and ἀδυστάτως; the promise that God will fulfil such a request; the assurance that God beareth no grudge (οὐκ ἔστι γὰρ ὁ θεὸς ὡς οἱ ἄνθρωποι οἱ μνησικακοῦντες ἀλλ' αὐτὸς ἀνυστάτως ἔστι); the warning that οἱ διψυχοὶ . . . οὐδὲν ὅλως ἐπιτυγχάνουσι τῶν αἰτημάτων αὐτῶν; the exhortation to pray ἐν τῇ πίστει; the generalisation that ἡ διψυχία . . . πάντων ἀποτυγχάνει τῶν ἔργων αὐτῆς ὧν πράσσει, all have their parallels, and to some extent in the same order, in Jas. 1st. Further, the passage contains a number of single phrases (e. g. ἡ πίστις βιωθὲν ἔστι . . . ἡ δὲ διψυχία ἐπίγειον πνεῦμά ἐστι παρὰ τοῦ διαβόλου; καθάρισον οὖν τὴν καρδίαν σου; σεαυτὸν αἰτιῶ καὶ μὴ τὸν διδόντα σοι) which closely resemble language found in various parts of the epistle.

But there is no reason to suppose that the author of James coined the word δίδυμος, and the parallels do not, either individually or in their combination, go beyond the range of religious commonplaces, while the more original elements of expression and thought in these very verses of James are wholly neglected. Sermons and tracts from all ages show just such resemblances in countless instances where no possibility of literary dependence exists.

Similar illustrations of the relation of the two documents can be multiplied almost indefinitely, but nowhere else is there so near an approach to a parallelism in the development of a considerable context as in Mand. ix. A comparison of the elaboration in Mand. viii of what is compactly expressed in Jas. 1st is also instructive; cf. Ep. Barnab. 20.

Irenæus.—The following passages alone come in question:

In the first of these (iv, 16<sup>2</sup>) the striking identity of language with Jas. 2<sup>22</sup> is wholly due to the last five words, and may well be a coincidence, for the combination of ideas is natural, and was current apart from James (cf. Clem. Rom. 10<sup>1</sup>, Ἰσραὴλ ὁ φίλος προσαγορευθεὶς, and 10<sup>8</sup>), and the form of expression is the simplest and most direct possible. The other resemblances are too slight to show any literary relationship.

Westcott, CNT, 1896, p. 391, and Harnack, Das Neue Testament um das Jahr 200, 1889, p. 79, see here no evidence that Irenæus knew James. On the other hand, Zahn, Forschungen, iii, 1884, p. 152; GnK, i, 1888, p. 325; Grundriss, 1904, p. 21; Jülicher, Einleitung, 1906, p. 453; Leipoldt, GnK, i, 1907, p. 235, accept the evidence of use by Irenæus as probably valid. Weiss, Einleitung, 1889, p. 72, inclines, though with more reserve, to the same view. For the opinions of other writers, see Meinertz, Jakobusbrief, 1905, p. 68, note 6.

Iren. iv, 34<sup>4</sup> libertatis lex, iv, 39<sup>4</sup> τὸν θεσμὸν τῆς ἐλευθερίας, are fully accounted for from Irenæus's own emphasis on the liberty of the Gospel, and do not indicate any acquaintance with James; cf. Iren. iii, 12<sup>14</sup>; iv, 9<sup>2</sup>; iv, 37<sup>1</sup>.

Tertullian.—No passage in Tertullian proves use of James, and his omission to quote Jas. 1<sup>13</sup> in discussing the Lord's Prayer, De orat. 8, seems to show that he was not acquainted with it, or at any rate that he ascribed to it no apostolic or sacred authority.

So Westcott, CNT<sup>1</sup>, p. 379; Weiss, Einleitung<sup>2</sup>, p. 72; Rönisch, Das Neue Testament Tertullian's, 1871, pp. 572-574. Zahn, Forschungen, iii, p. 152, held to Tertullian's dependence on James in Adv. Jud. 2, De orat. 8; later, GnK, i, p. 325, he leaves the question undecided; and finally, Grundriss<sup>3</sup>, p. 20, he ventures no statement. Jülicher, Einleitung<sup>4</sup>, p. 453, is uncertain; Leipoldt, GnK, i, p. 235, is inclined to accept the evidence of use as "perhaps" valid.

Clement of Alexandria.—No passage is found where Clement of Alexandria shows acquaintance with James. Eusebius, however, writes of Clement as follows:

Hist. eccl. vi, 14<sup>1</sup> ἐν δὲ ταῖς Ὑποτυπώσεις, ξυνελόντα εἰπεῖν, πάσης τῆς ἐνδιαθήκου γραφῆς ἐπιτετμημένας πεποιήται διηγήσεις, μηδὲ τὰς ἀντιλεγόμενας παρελθών, τὴν Ἰουδα λέγω καὶ τὰς λοιπὰς καθολικὰς ἐπιστολὰς τὴν τε Βαρναβᾶ καὶ τὴν Πέτρου λεγομένην Ἀποκάλυψιν.

The statement about Clement made by Photius, Biblioth. cod. 109 ἐρμηνεῖται . . . τοῦ θεοῦ Παύλου τῶν ἐπιστολῶν καὶ τῶν καθολικῶν, is to the same effect, and the two testimonies would be accepted as attesting Clement's knowledge of James, were it not that the Latin Adumbrationes Clementis in epistolas canonicas, which are accepted as the translation of the Hypotyposes made under the direction of Cassiodorus in the sixth century, include only 1 Peter, Jude, 1 and 2 John. That these four pieces were only selections from a larger body of Latin translations is made less likely by the careful reference of Cassiodorus to only four epistles in the following passage:

De instit. div. lit. 8: In epistolis autem canonicis Clemens Alexandrinus presbyter, qui et Stromateus vocatur, id est in epistola sancti Petri prima, sancti Joannis prima et secunda, et Jacobi quaedam attico sermone declaravit. Ubi multa quidem subtiliter sed aliqua incaute locutus est, quae nos ita transferri fecimus in latinum, ut exclusis quibusdam offenculis purificata doctrina ejus securior potuisset hauriri. Since one of the pieces translated at the order of Cassiodorus was certainly a commentary on Jude, the conjecture is natural that an error in the text (or the memory) of Cassiodorus has here substituted "James" for "Jude." This conclusion and the lack of use anywhere in Clement's extant writings of the three epistles (James, 2 Peter, 3 John) not included in the Latin Adumbrationes must be admitted to throw some doubt on the inference which would otherwise be drawn from the statements of Eusebius and Photius, and the question must be left undecided. The general relation of Clement to Origen would make it entirely natural that he as well as Origen should have had the epistle; but it certainly made no appeal to his interest.

§ 2. THE GREEK CHURCH.

Origen makes many quotations from our epistle, sometimes naming James as the source; e. g.:

Comm. in Joan. t. xix, c. 23 ἐὰν δὲ λέγῃται μὲν πίστις, χωρὶς δὲ ἔργων τυγχάνῃ, νεκρά ἐστὶν ἡ τοιαύτη, ὡς ἐν τῇ φερομένη Ἰακώβου ἐπιστολῇ ἀνέγνωμεν.

Other formulas used by Origen in quoting James are:

ὡς παρὰ Ἰακώβου (Select. in Ps. 30, ed. Lommatzsch, vol. xii, p. 129);

φησὶν ὁ ἀπόστολος (ibid. 65, vol. xii, p. 395);

φησὶ γὰρ Ἰάκωβος (ibid. 118, vol. xiii, p. 100);

See Mayor<sup>3</sup>, pp. lxxxi. The Latin extracts given by Mayor, in some of which James is called "apostle" or "brother of the Lord," are from the version of Rufinus, and cannot be trusted in this particular. Other similar Latin passages could be added to Mayor's collection.

Origen thus regarded the author of James as an "apostle," and included the epistle in "Scripture"; moreover, in his comprehensive statements about the contents of the N. T., preserved, to be sure, only in the Latin of Rufinus (Hom. in Gen. xiii, 2, the "wells"; Hom. in Jos. vii, 1, the "trumpets"), he includes James with Peter and Jude among the authors of the N. T. This evidence is confirmed by his abundant use of passages from the epistle in his works.

The fact that, in speaking of James the Lord's brother in Comm. in Matt. x, 17 (on 13<sup>55 f.</sup>), Origen fails to mention any epistle by him may, however, indicate that he then believed the epistle to have been written by some other Apostle James. The omission of any reference to the Epistle of James (or to that of Jude) in the passage quoted by Eusebius, H. e. vi, 25<sup>7-10</sup>, from Origen's commentary on John, book v, is noteworthy, but the purpose of the passage is to show that even the great apostles, Paul, Peter, and John, wrote but little, and mention of James was not necessary.

The precise attitude toward the epistle indicated by the word φερομένη in the first extract quoted above has been much discussed. But the expression seems to mean "current," and does not indicate any qualification of Origen's acceptance of the writing in question. Cf. Comm. in Joann. t. i, c. 2 (with reference to the law of Moses) τῶν τῶν φερομένων γραφῶν καὶ ἐν πάσαις ἐκκλησίαις θεοῦ πεπιστευμένων εἶναι θέλων οὐκ ἂν ἁμάρτοι τις λέγων πρωτογέννημα μὲν τὸν Μωϋσέως νόμον ἀπαρχὴν δὲ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον; t. i, c. 3 φάσκων μετὰ τὰ εὐαγγέλια τὰς πράξεις καὶ τὰς ἐπιστολάς φέρεσθαι τῶν ἀποστόλων . . . ἐν ταῖς φερομέναις ἐπιστολαῖς.

The positive evidence that Origen counted James as a "disputed" book, and had scruples about including it in his N. T., seems to reduce itself to an over-hasty inference from Comm. in Joh. xx, 10 οὐ συγχωρηθὲν ἀν ὁπὸ τῶν παραδεχομένων τὸ Πίστις χωρὶς ἔργων νεκρά ἐστίν, where the context shows that there is no implication whatever that any class of recognised Christians deliberately rejected James. Zahn's statement in GnK, i, p. 323 and note 1, was correct, and has been unfortunately modified in Grundriss<sup>2</sup>, p. 43; cf. Gregory, Canon and Text of the New Testament, 1907, pp. 226 f.

The extant writers of the Greek church contemporary with Origen or just after his time made somewhat sparing use of James, but there is no reason to think that any of them failed to include it in his N. T. The antiquity of the epistle, its practical religious and moral usefulness for edification, and the growing belief that it was written by the Apostle James (see pp. 43-45) were motives which united to compel acceptance of it. A third-century papyrus and all Greek copies of the Catholic epistles (the earliest of which date from the fourth century) contain it, and it is found in the several Egyptian versions, which must have followed the custom of Alexandria.

Frequent use and direct quotation of James, apparently as Scripture (i, 11<sup>4</sup>), are found in the pseudo-clementine Epistolae ad virgines, probably written in Palestine or southern Syria in the early decades of the third century. In the same century perhaps Gregory Thaumaturgus* († c. 270), probably Dionysius of Alexandria† († 265), and certainly Methodius of Olympus‡ († c. 311) show acquaintance with James.

In the fourth century the evidence increases. Eusebius uses the epistle freely,§ and it seems to have formed part of his N. T. The fifty copies of the N. T. made under his direction by order of the Emperor Constantine no doubt included the seven Catholic epistles, and we may assume that this was true also of the copies prepared by Pamphilus († 309). The statement of Eusebius that some did not accept James is to be understood of the Syrians.

From Eusebius's statements a knowledge of these ancient doubts about James was kept alive among Greek scholars through the Middle Ages; cf., for instance, in the fourteenth century, Nicephorus Callistus, Hist. eccl. ii, 46.

The Catalogus Claromontanus (Ms. of sixth century; the list is believed to have been composed in Alexandria in the fourth century) includes it, as do the lists of Athanasius, Cyril of Jerusalem, Epiphanius, Gregory of Nazianzus, Amphilochius, and Chrysostom.* In many of these writers quotations or allusions are also found.†

To these witnesses may be added Macarius of Egypt († 391), the so-called 60th canon of the Council of Laodicea (fourth or fifth century), and from the fifth century Cyril of Alexandria, Isidore of Pelusium, Hesychius of Jerusalem, Marcus Eremita, Eusebius of Alexandria.‡

The acceptance of James in the Greek church (not including certain Greek-speaking Syrians) is thus unbroken from the time of Origen, when the book first emerges into the light of history. Before the year 400 knowledge of it is attested for Alexandria, Palestine, Cyprus, Asia Minor, and Constantinople.

THE ARMENIAN CHURCH. The Armenian N. T., in the only form known to us, was made to correspond to Greek Mss. brought from Constantinople after 431, and hence includes James with the other Catholic epistles; see the full references to Armenian writers of the fifth century given by Meinertz, Jakobusbrief, pp. 185-189.

The resemblances in the passages from the Clementine Homilies cited by Mayor<sup>4</sup>, pp. lxxiii f., are inadequate to show acquaintance with James. Gregory of Nyssa nowhere alludes to James.

§ 3. THE SYRIAN CHURCH.

W. Bauer, Der Apostolos der Syrer, 1903; Zahn, "Das Neue Testament Theodors von Mopsvestia und der ursprüngliche Kanon der Syrer," in Neue Kirchliche Zeitschrift, xi, 1900, pp. 788-806.

The history of the epistle among the Syrians is very different, but shows the gradual effect of the influence of Greek learned authority. The earliest translation of James into Syriac was that of c. 412 in the Peshitto version, which included also 1 Peter and 1 John. Previous to that time none of the Catholic epistles had gained complete acceptance into the Syrian canon.

Zahn, GnK, i, pp. 373-375. Cf. Doct. Addai, 46. The Syrian canon published from a ninth-century Ms. by Mrs. A. S. Lewis, Studia Sinaitica, i, 1894, pp. 11-14, is believed to have been composed about 400 A.D.; it includes the four Gospels, Acts, and the epistles of Paul (with Hebrews and perhaps 3 Corinthians), but expressly excludes all the Catholic epistles as well as the Apocalypse.

Hence Aphraates (c. 345) and the genuine works of Ephraem (†378) show no trace of acquaintance with James, and no clear trace is found in the scant remains of other literature in the Syriac tongue down to the great division of the Syrian church after the Council of Chalcedon (451).

So Burkitt, "Text und Versions," in EB, iv, 1903, col. 5004, note; cf. also Westcott, CNT, p. 452; Jülicher, Einleitung, p. 490; and Burkitt, S. Ephraim's Quotations from the Gospel (TS, vii, 2), 1901. The contrary statements of Zahn, Grundriss, p. 53 (altered in 2d ed.), and of J. A. Bewer, "The History of the New Testament Canon in the Syrian Church," in American Journal of Theology, iv, 1900, p. 349, are founded on the evidence adduced in the "Scriptural Index" in J. H. Hill, Dissertation on the Gospel Commentary of S. Ephraem the Syrian, 1896. But in so far as the references to James there collected are drawn from works preserved only in Greek or Latin, they are worthless (cf. Zahn, Forschungen, i, p. 46); and the remainder, found in Syriac works, are shown by Bauer, op. cit. pp. 42-47, to be in every case inadequate to prove use of James. Bauer himself, p. 48, has added two instances of possible use, only one of which, however, deserves consideration, the phrase "father of lights," abba d' nahire, found in Opera, v, col. 489. The "Polemic Sermon," No. 23, in which this occurs is undoubtedly genuine, but the context contains no hint of the passage in James, and the allusion is not clear enough to permit any inference whatever. Bauer, pp. 52 f., has gone too far in saying that Ephraem probably knew James, and has unfortunately been followed here by Leipoldt, GrK, i, p. 245.

The resemblance to Jas. 3<sup>11</sup> (Peshitto) in Isaac of Antioch († c. 460), ed. Bickell, i, 1873, p. 132, pointed out by Bauer, p. 53, perhaps is due to acquaintance with James, but may be accidental.

In the Doctrine of the Apostles, published by Cureton and Wright, Ancient Syriac Documents, p. 32, there is a singular reference to "what James had written from Jerusalem." If the document is from the fourth century (Harnack, Ueberlieferung und Bestand der altchristl. Literatur, p. 535) this might form an exception to the above statement. See Westcott, CNT<sup>1</sup>, p. 251.

Even among Greek-speaking members of the undivided Syrian church, a considerable group did not recognise James as a part of the N. T. The most notable of these is the Antiochian, Theodore of Mopsuestia* († c. 429), who accepted no one of the Catholic epistles. The same may have been the attitude of Titus of Bostra († c. 371), and was probably that of Severianus of Gabala (c. 400, a Syrian by birth), and of the author of the Apostolic Constitutions.

In one passage, Pseudo-Ignatius, Philipp. 11 πὼς παρὰ τῆς τῶν ἀποστόλων, the author of the Apostolic Constitutions perhaps betrays his knowledge of Jas. 1<sup>12</sup>. Apart, however, from this possible allusion to James, this writer shows acquaintance with no Catholic epistle except 1 Peter, and in his use of 1 Peter nowhere indicates that it was a part of his N. T.; cf. Bauer, op. cit. pp. 61 f.

In later centuries, too, there is adequate evidence that by many of the leaders of the Nestorians in Eastern Syria James was not accepted, although they used the Peshitto. In 545 Paul of Nisibis, lecturing at Constantinople but doubtless representing accurately the opinion of the school of Nisibis, attributed full canonicity only to 1 Peter and 1 John, and classed James with the antilegomena.† So Cosmas Indicopleustes (c. 545), who had become acquainted with East Syrian theologians, says that there are various views about the Catholic epistles, and that some reject all of them; but it is not clear that he refers to contemporaries.* In the eighth century Theodore bar-Koni, the Nestorian, apparently rejected all the Catholic epistles.† About 825 Isho'dad, bishop of Haditha on the Tigris, refers to others besides Theodore who reject all the Catholic epistles, and may have in mind contemporaries of his own.‡ In the preface to the Catholic epistles by the Jacobite scholar, Bar-Hebræus (1226-86), the doubts about James, 1 Peter, and 1 John are mentioned (although Bar-Hebræus himself accepted those epistles), and this preface is found included in Syriac N. T. Mss. as late as the fifteenth century.

This Ms. is dated 1471, and probably came likewise from near Mardin.

In the latter Ms. the preface runs as follows (Hall, l. c. p. 41):

"Three Catholic, that is, General, epistles were translated into Syriac from the beginning: one of James, the brother of our Lord, who was bishop in Jerusalem, and wrote to the believing people that were scattered in every place of captivities and persecutions, and to them was directed this first epistle; and the second, of Peter; and the third, of John. But men have doubted about them, because they were not like the [proper] style of speech, and because they were not written to any one person or people. But Eusebius assures [us] that they are theirs."

On the other hand, after about 350 the movement to adopt some at least of the seven Catholic epistles recognised by the Greek church is clearly seen among the Western Syrians, both of Antioch (where Greek was spoken) and of Edessa.* Thus Apollinarius of Laodicea in Syria († c. 390), whose father, however, was a native of Alexandria, is said to have commented on James.† Chrysostom († 407) uses James freely, and in the so-called Synopsis of Chrysostom, which, whatever its origin, correctly represents that writer's views, James is included with 1 Peter and 1 John (καὶ τῶν καθολικῶν ἐπιστολαὶ τρεῖς). Polychronius († 428), the brother of Theodore of Mopsuestia, introduces a citation from James as from τῆς τῶν ἀποστόλων. Theodoret († c. 457) quotes Jas. 5<sup>13</sup> and makes at least one other allusion.‡ In Edessa the Peshitto version was made by the direction of Rabbula (bishop 411-435), and, in accordance with the then current canon of Antioch, it included James, 1 Peter, and 1 John.

In the case of Lucian of Antioch († 311) it is likely, though it cannot be proved, that he accepted James, 1 Peter, and 1 John; cf. Zahn, Grundriss<sup>2</sup>, p. 54; Harnack, art. "Lucian der Märtyrer," in Herzog-Hauck, PRE, xi, 1902.

From this time on the position of James in the Monophysite branch of the church grew increasingly secure, in accordance with the general tendencies of the time. The successive revisions of the Syriac N. T., under Bishop Philoxenus in 508 and by Thomas of Heraclea in 616, even brought in the other four Catholic epistles and completed in Syriac the Greek canon of seven. The seven are included in the 85th of the apostolic canons appended to the Apostolic Constitutions, which is believed to have been drawn up in Syria in the early part of the fifth century, and, having been translated into Syriac not later than 600, became a corner-stone of ecclesiastical law in the east.§ To the full Greek canon, with seven Catholic epistles, John of Damascus (c. 750) lent the influence of his great authority.

The history of the acceptance of James among the Nestorians is not known, but their great scholar Ebed Jesu of Nisibis († 1318), in his Catalogue of All the Books of the Church, includes "three epistles which in every manuscript and language are ascribed to Apostles, namely to James and to Peter and to John." *

The history of the epistle in the Syrian church thus clearly illustrates a natural process. At first the canon of the Syrians consisted only of the Gospels (i. e. the Diatessaron) and the epistles of Paul; but gradually other books were adopted from Greek neighbours, and this took place most rapidly in the western churches which looked to Antioch and Edessa for authoritative judgment. But even among the Antiochians James only won its place in the face of long-continued and influential opposition, although progress was greatly aided by the wide use of the Peshitto. In the parts of Syria remoter from Greek influence the adoption of James into the canon was tardier, and down almost to modern times a vivid recollection was preserved of the doubtful position of James, as of the other Catholic epistles.

§ 4. THE WESTERN CHURCH.

The western church shows the same tardiness in the acceptance of James that we have traced among the Syrians; and here again it was the influence of Alexandria that ultimately brought the epistle into the Latin canon. Before the middle of the fourth century there is no clear trace of any acquaintance with James. The Canon of Muratori omits it; Irenæus makes no certain use of it; Tertullian seems either not to have known it or to have rejected it. Among the innumerable quotations of Cyprian there is none from James, and Novatian (c. 252), De trin. 4, would almost certainly have quoted Jas. 1<sup>17</sup> if he had known it as a part of Scripture.† A hundred years later (c. 359) the African Catalogus Mommsonianus omits James, and it is worthy of note that even Ambrose († 397) never directly quotes from it.

The evidence adduced for use by Hippolytus (Zahn, Grundriss<sup>2</sup>, p. 21; cf. his earlier and more accurate statement, GnK, i, pp. 323 f.) is wholly inadequate. One passage often quoted (Hippol. ed. Lagarde, p. 122) is from a ninth-century treatise. The resemblances in the commentary on Daniel (Bonwetsch, Studien zu den Kommentaren Hippolyts (Texte und Untersuchungen, xvi, 3), 1897, p. 26) are too slight to have any weight, as are those in the Berlin Griechische christliche Schriftsteller, Hippolytus, ed. Achelis, vol. i, part ii, 1897, pp. 6, 60 f. The possible reference to Jas. 1<sup>1</sup>, "the word of Jude in his first letter to the twelve tribes" (ibid. p. 231), is in a catena-fragment taken from an Arabic commentary on the Apocalypse made in the thirteenth century, and, wholly apart from the obvious questions of transmission and genuineness, is too confused and too slight for any affirmation to be founded on it (so Zahn, GnK, i, p. 323).

On Ambrose, cf. Wordsworth, SB, i, p. 128, note 2. It is probable that the passage, Expos. evang. Luc. viii, 13, sive Lazarus pauper in sæculo sed deo dives, sive apostolicus aliquis pauper in verbo, locuples in fide betrays acquaintance with Jas. 2<sup>4</sup>. The probability is increased by the agreement with the version of ff (pauperes sæculi, locupleles in fide) against the Vulgate (pauperes in hoc mundo, divites in fide).

The earliest evidence of knowledge of James in the Latin west is probably to be found in the Latin translation on which the texts of Codex Corbeiensis, the pseudo-augustinian Speculum, and the Vulgate all ultimately rest. This must have been made, at latest, by 350 A.D. But in Codex Corbeiensis the epistle is included in a collection of patristic tracts, and there is no evidence that it was a part of any Latin N. T. until a generation later.*

The earliest Latin writer to quote from James is Hilary of Poitiers, De trin. iv, 8 (written 356-358, during his exile in Asia Minor and the east), who refers to it once only, and then in a catena of passages which, he alleges, are misused by the Arians in support of their heresy. Since the form of his quotation (demutatio; cf., however, Priscillian, Tract. i, p. 26. 21) agrees with no known Latin version of James, it is likely that Hilary is making his own translation from the Greek.

"Ambrosiaster" (366-382; like Jerome, with whom he seems in other ways to have had some relations, a supporter of Damasus) once quotes Jas. 5<sup>20</sup>, in a form almost identical with that of the Vulgate.* Priscillian (375-386), likewise closely connected with the east, repeatedly quotes James in a Latin translation substantially identical with that of the pseudo-augustinian Speculum (m).† Philastrius of Brescia (383-391) included James in his canon.‡

The Vulgate revision of the epistles, including James, seems to have been prepared in 384-385, and wielded invincible authority.§ Jerome also makes many quotations from the epistle in his own writings,|| and in 392 wrote as follows:

The canon of Rufinus (c. 404)** included Jacobi fratris domini et apostoli unam, as would be expected from the many references to James in similar terms found in his translations of the exegetical works of Origen. Chromatius of Aquileia († 406), the intimate friend of both Jerome and Rufinus, quotes James with a text closely like that of Codex Corbeiensis (ff).††

Augustine (354-430) is the first African to make use of the Epistle of James.‡‡ He adopted exactly the canon of Jerome, and under his influence this list of books was established, probably by the Council of Hippo in 393 and the "third" Council of Carthage in 397, certainly by the Council of Carthage in 419.§§ The Donatists of this period also accepted the same Catholic epistles as the Catholic church.|||| In 405 Pope Innocent I wrote a letter to Exsuperius, bishop of Toulouse, in which he names these same books as constituting the N. T. Worthy of mention is the fact that when, about 544, Cassiodorius had a copy of the N. T. prepared, secundum antiquam translationem (i. e. as it was before the revision by Jerome), this copy included James.

§ The Roman synod of 382 is a mere assumption to account for the so-called Decretum Gelasianum, containing a list of the books of the N. T. which was supposed to have proceeded from it. E. von Dobschütz, Das Decretum Gelasianum (Texte und Untersuchungen, xxxviii), 1912, has now proved that the Decretum is a pseudepigraphic document of the first half of the sixth century.

The difference between the Greek and the Latin canon of the N. T., which lasted until the end of the fourth century, is nowhere more clearly seen (not even in the case of the Epistle to the Hebrews) than in the Epistle of James; and in the west, as in Syria, it seems to have been men acquainted with the learning and custom of Alexandria who brought the Epistle of James into general use and made it an integral part of the N. T. But in the west, unlike Syria, authority promptly prevailed, and after the beginning of the fifth century no trace is found of any lingering prejudice against James.

§ 5. ORDER OF THE CATHOLIC EPISTLES.*

The order in which the Catholic epistles were arranged is not determinable earlier than Eusebius. His order is probably James, Peter, John, Jude; in any case he put James first. This order is that followed by Cyril of Jerusalem, Athanasius, Epiphanius, Gregory of Nazianzus, Euthalius, the later Greek lists, nearly all Greek Mss., and the Bohairic version. In the Peshitto a similar order is found, James, 1 Peter, 1 John. In a few instances from among the Greeks the epistles of Peter are put first, so, notably, in the 85th apostolic canon and Codex Ψ (cent. viii or ix).

In the west before Jerome a different condition is found, which reflects the fact that until that time the western church did not possess a complete and definitive canon of Catholic epistles. Nearly always, in honour to the Roman see, Peter is put first; so in the usage of Rufinus, in all three of the codices prepared for Cassiodorius, and in the list of the Codex Claromontanus. The place of James varies among the other three stations; but there was a tendency to adopt the order Peter, John, James, Jude, and this order recurs later from time to time, and is followed in the decree of the Council of Trent of April 8, 1546.*

In the Vulgate, on the other hand, the Greek order, James, Peter, John, Jude, was followed, and no Vulgate Ms. is known which departs from it. The Codex Fuldensis (c. 540 A.D.) contains an older, pseudo-hieronymian, prologue to the Catholic epistles, which expressly states that the order of the orthodox Greeks differs from that earlier current in Latin Mss. and that the Greek order was introduced into Latin usage by Jerome. From the Vulgate the Greek order has come into the modern English Bible.

After the early part of the fifth century any doubt as to the right of James to a place in the canon disappeared from the west, and only Isidore of Seville († 636) so much as refers to the ancient doubts.† In 1516 the first published edition of the Greek Testament in print appeared, with Annotationes by its editor Erasmus. In these (p. 601), with clear internal indication of dependence on the statements of Jerome, Erasmus mentions the scruples of antiquity, and adds some reasons of his own, drawn from language and style, for doubting whether the epistle is from the hands of an apostle.‡ Nevertheless, he heartily accepts it as a proper part of the canon.

The influence of Erasmus's learning was felt in both the Catholic and Protestant camps. On the Catholic side Cardinal Cajetan, who had a knowledge of Jerome at first hand, allowed himself in some matters to adopt a criticism more radical than that of Erasmus, but in the case of James he was satisfied (1529) with pronouncing its apostolic authorship uncertain. At the Council of Trent these free views were vigorously represented, and appeal made to the authority of Jerome, but in the decree of April 8, 1546, the Epistle of James was included in the list of sacred and canonical Scripture and its author declared to be an apostle.*

This action has led to a distinction,† still current in the Roman Catholic church, between those books of the Bible which, it is believed, have always been accepted (sometimes called "proto-canonical"), and those which only gradually attained full canonical authority ("deutero-canonical"). To the latter class belongs the Epistle of James. But this is purely an historical classification; no defect of canonicity is held to pertain to the "deutero-canonical" books, whether in O. T. or N. T.

On the Protestant side the canonical character of certain books, and notably of James, was earnestly contested. The doubts raised by the historical learning of Erasmus were strengthened as the reformers undertook, on the basis of independent investigation, to separate the original substance of Christian doctrine from its later accretions of tradition. The ancient external evidence from the first four centuries as to the apostolic origin of certain books (Hebrews, James, 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, Jude, Revelation) was seen to be by no means uniformly favourable, and the question arose whether such books could be treated as safe bases of doctrinal authority. At the same time a new criterion of canonicity was introduced by Luther, who classified the books of the traditional canon according as they showed fidelity to the Gospel of Christ ("Christum predigen und treyben") as he understood it, that is, to the doctrine of salvation by faith, most clearly expressed in John, Romans, and 1 Peter (these "the true kernel and marrow among all the books"). Luther's objection to James is found as early as 1519,* but his judgments were most clearly expressed in the first edition of his German N. T. (Wittenberg, September, 1522). In the Introduction to this he says:

† The distinction appears in Sixtus Senensis (1566), and was maintained by Bellarmine (1586); see Leipoldt, GnK, pp. 52 ff.

"In fine, Saint John's Gospel and his first epistle, Saint Paul's epistles, especially those to the Romans, Galatians, Ephesians, and Saint Peter's first epistle,—these are the books which show thee Christ, and teach thee everything that is needful and blessed for thee to know even though thou never see or hear any other book or doctrine. Therefore is Saint James's epistle a right strawy epistle ('eyn rechte stroern Epistel'†) in comparison with them, for it has no gospel character to it."

The special preface to James presents his view in detail. He values the epistle because it emphasises the Law of God ("Gottis gesetz hart treybt"), but denies its apostolic authorship, chiefly on the ground that it teaches justification by works. He concludes:

"Therefore I will not have it in my Bible in the number of the proper chief books, but do not intend thereby to forbid anyone to place and exalt it as he pleases, for there is many a good saying in it."

In printing, Luther separated James, with Jude, Hebrews, and Revelation, from the other book of the N. T., putting them at the end of the volume and assigning them no numbers in his table of contents.

In the first edition of the complete German Bible (1534), the section of the Introduction containing the remark that James is "a right strawy epistle" was for some reason omitted; but the preface to James is not substantially altered, and in many other utterances, public and private, and extending through the whole period of his life, Luther expressed the same judgment, with no lessening of decisiveness or vigour. In the successive issues of the German Bible down to the present day, the order of the books of the N. T. remains that of Luther, although since 1603 it has grown customary to assign numbers to the four contested books with the rest.

† The phrase is founded on the "wood, hay, stubble" of 1 Cor. 3<sup>18</sup>, to which Luther also alludes in his preface to Hebrews. It means only that the epistle contains much straw, not that it is wholly composed of it.

The view held by Luther, that James, in view of its inner character, ought not to be given full canonical authority, while yet, as a book profitable for edification, it ought not to be utterly rejected, is substantially the view of most of the earlier German Protestants. Dogmatic and exegetical writers formulated it with great variety of shades of emphasis. They frequently permitted themselves sharp criticism of the epistle, and expressly denied its authority for the establishment of doctrine, and to Luther's subjective grounds they added arguments drawn from the early history of the canon. Such attacks were stimulated afresh by the attempted compromise of the "Augsburg Interim" (1548), in which Jas. 5<sup>14</sup> was used as authority for the sacrament of extreme unction. The most complete formal rejection is to be found in the so-called Württemberg Confession (1552), in which is contained this article:

"De sacra scriptura. Sacram scripturam vocamus eos canonicos libros Veteris et Novi Testamenti de quorum auctoritate in ecclesia numquam dubitatum est."

This was intended to exclude definitely from the canon the seven disputed books, some or all of which were frequently designated as "apocrypha of the New Testament" or even (as in Wolder's Polyglot, Hamburg, 1596) as "non-canonical."

On the other hand, Luther's jealous personal opponent, Carlstadt, in his elaborate investigation of the canonical Scriptures, while recognising that James and the other disputed books are of lesser dignity and value, yet refused to admit that they lack full canonical authority. In favour of the Epistle of James was also thrown the powerful influence of Melancthon, who believed that the statements of James about justification could be understood in such a way as to escape conflict with the doctrines of Paul.

In the later years of the sixteenth century, with the establishment of the stricter doctrine of inspiration, the doubts about the canonical authority of James tended to disappear among orthodox Lutherans, and after the year 1600 they are seldom heard except from the ranks of the rationalistic and critical theologians. The German doctrinal standards do not contain lists of the books of the N. T., but the rightfulness of the position of James in the canon was assumed at the date when these documents were prepared, and was plainly deemed unassailable. The terms "deutero-canonical," "libri canonici secundi ordinis" continued in use for many years, but were emptied of all substantial meaning.

Kawerau, op. cit. p. 369, "Die Konkordienformel mit ihrem Rückgang auf die Apologie (p. 693) bezeichnet wol den Wendepunkt in der Beurtheilung des Jakobusbriefes. Die Inspirationslehre des nachfolgenden Dogmatikergeschlechtes hätte ein kritisches Urtheil nicht mehr vertragen können."

In the reformed churches outside of Germany Luther's principle of discrimination between the different books of the N. T. did not meet with favour, and although the ancient doubts as to certain books were fully recognised, there seems to have been little or no disposition to set up a new canon. Zwingli, Calvin, Beza, and their followers all accepted James as canonical, although it was admitted that the authorship was disputable. The Gallican Confession (1559) and the Belgic Confession (1561) include James in their lists of Holy Scripture. After this time critics sometimes denied the genuineness and apostolic authorship of books, but they had no idea of altering the contents of the traditional N. T.

In England the early translations show strong Lutheran influence.* Tyndale's New Testaments (1525) follow the arrangement of Luther in putting Hebrews, James, Jude, Revelation at the end, and giving them no numbers in the table of contents. This is in accord with the adoption by Tyndale of much matter from Luther's prefaces and with other marks of dependence on the German Bible. Tyndale's prologue to James * H. H. Howorth, "The Origin and Authority of the Biblical Canon in the Anglican Church," in JTS, viii, 1906-7, pp. 1-40.

(1534) alludes to ancient doubts and later objections, but concludes: "Me thynketh it ought of ryght to be taken for holye Scripture," and no movement for rejecting the epistle from the canon seems to have arisen in England.

The Bibles of Coverdale (1535), "Matthew" (1537), and Taverner (1539) likewise preserve the Lutheran order. In the Great Bible (1539), published by ecclesiastical authority, the Vulgate order of the N. T. books is for the first time found in an English Bible.* This was naturally followed in the Bishops' Bible (1568), and King James's Bible (1611); but it had already become familiar to the Puritans through the Geneva N. T. (1557), in which the order of the books, as well as many other evidences, shows the transition in English Puritanism from Lutheran to Calvinistic influences.

Dutch, Swiss, Danish, and Swedish Bibles of the sixteenth century are known, and even an Icelandic Bible published at Copenhagen in 1807, which follow Luther's order; cf. Leipoldt, GnK, ii, pp. 101, 104; H. H. Howorth, "The Origin and Authority of the Biblical Canon according to the Continental Reformers. II. Luther, Zwingli, Lefèvre, and Calvin," in JTS, ix, 1907-8, pp. 188-230, and "The Canon of the Bible among the Later Reformers," ibid. x, 1908-9, pp. 182-232.

The Thirty-Nine Articles (1562) declare (Art. VI): "All the Books of the New Testament, as they are commonly received, we do receive, and account them Canonical." The Westminster Confession (1647) expressly includes James in the list of Scripture.

The Thirty-Nine Articles are inconsistent, for Art. VI also states: "In the name of the Holy Scripture we do understand those canonical Books of the Old and New Testament of whose authority was never any doubt in the Church." This sentence was taken almost verbatim from the Württemberg Confession of 1551 (where it was deliberately phrased so as to exclude from the canon the seven disputed books), and the contradiction with the specific statement, quoted above, which follows it in the English article was perhaps not noticed. See Schaff, Creeds of Christendom, i, p. 628.

G. Walch, Bibliotheca theologica, vol. iv, 1765.

§ 1. PATRISTIC AND MEDIÆVAL.

Of patristic and mediæval commentaries but seven are extant and accessible: in Greek, the Catena of Andreas (ed. Cramer) and the wrongly named "Æcumenius"; in Latin, Bede and Walafrid Strabo; in Syriac, Isho' Dad, Bar-Salibi, and Bar-Hebræus.

Clement of Alexandria probably included comments on James in his Hypotyposes (see above, pp. 91 f.), but no fragment of them has been preserved.

The numerous passages from Chrysostom in Cramer's Catena of Andreas on James (collected in Migne, Patrologia græca, vol. lxiv) are not fragments of a commentary, but have been identified in nearly every case as coming from known writings of Chrysostom; cf. S. Haidacher, "Chrysostomus-Fragmente zu den katholischen Briefen," Zeitschrift für katholische Theologie, 1902, pp. 190-194. The five passages of this catena from Hesychius of Jerusalem († 433), collected in Migne, vol. xciii, and the ten from Cyril of Alexandria († 444), collected in Migne, vol. lxxiv, bear no mark of coming from a commentary on James.

The Latin work, In epistolas catholicas enarratio, ascribed in the Mss. to Didymus of Alexandria († 398), includes James, and is probably the translation made in the sixth century by Epiphanius Scholasticus for Cassiodorus (cf. Cassiodorus, Inst. 8). A large part, however, of the work (in James more than half) consists of extracts of various authorship taken from the same Catena of Andreas. The five brief catena-fragments expressly ascribed to Didymus show no sign of having been written for a commentary on the Catholic epistles, and Cassiodorus was probably mistaken in attributing such a work to Didymus.

Bardenhewer, Gesch. d. altkirchl. Litteratur, iii, pp. 109 f.; E. Klostermann, Über des Didymus von Alexandrien in epistolas canonicas enar- ratio (Texte und Untersuchungen, xxviii), 1905; F. Zoepfl, Didymi Alexandrini in epistolas canonicas brevis enarratio, Münster, 1914.

The Catena of Andreas was published by J. A. Cramer in Catenaë græcorum patrum in Novum Testamentum, Oxford, 1844, vol. viii (1840); cf. von Soden, Schriften des Neuen Testaments, i, pp. 278 f. The catena on the Catholic epistles here published has manuscript attestation from the ninth century (Codd. K and 1895); its present form (which includes fragments of Maximus Confessor († 662) is not to be dated earlier than 675. If, however, the Enarratio on the Catholic epistles ascribed to Didymus (as stated above) is in fact the translation referred to by Cassiodorus, then the Catena of Andreas, since it underlies the Enarratio, existed in an earlier form in the sixth century. The Catena is made up of more or less relevant passages from many authors, among whom Chrysostom takes by far the most prominent place, Cyril of Alexandria standing next. Of the earlier writings used by the compiler for the Epistle of James no one appears to have been a commentary on the epistle. The Catena of Andreas on the Catholic epistles is also printed in part by Matthäi, SS. apostolorum septem epistolæ catholicæ, Riga, 1782, pp. 183-245, and again, substantially complete, under the supposition of being a work of Euthymius Zigabenus (ed. Kalogeras, Athens, 1887, vol. ii; but cf. p. α').

An anonymous commentary on the Catholic epistles (Migne, Patrologia græca, vol. cxix) was ascribed to Œcumenius, bishop of Tricca in Thessaly (c. 600) by the first editor (Donatus, Verona, 1532), but without good reason. It is found in many Mss. of the tenth century and thereafter, and is associated with commentaries on Acts and the Pauline epistles, which may or may not be from the same hand with that on the Catholic epistles but in which the commentary on Paul is certainly not by Œcumenius. The work is a continuous interpretation, partly based on the Catena of Andreas, and often presenting acute and well-phrased exegetical comments.

Diekamp observes, p. 1056, that this commentary twice calls Basil τὸν ἡμέτερον, which seems to imply that the writer was either of the Basilian order or else a Cappadocian from Caesarea. This seems conclusive against the wholly unsupported guess of Donatus that the real Œcumenius was the author.

The year 990, formerly given as about the date of the bishop Œcumenius, was a mere guess of W. Cave. The discovery of the true date (c. 600) is due to F. Diekamp, "Mittheilungen über den neuaufgefundenen Commentar des Oeckumenius zur Apokalypse," in Sitzungsberichte der Akad. d. Wiss. zu Berlin, 1901, pp. 1046-1056.

Bardenhewer, art. "Œcumenius," in Wetzer and Welte's Kirchenlexikon<sup>2</sup>, 1895; A. Ehrhard in Krumbacher, Geschichte der byzantinischen Litteratur<sup>2</sup>, 1895, pp. 131-135; H. von Soden, Schriften des Neuen Testaments, i, 1902, pp. 686-692.

The scholia printed by Matthäi, Riga, 1782, at the foot of his text of the Catholic epistles, are drawn from the margin of Cod. 462 (ol. 101<sup>re</sup>) of the eleventh century, and appear to be the private notes of a devout owner of this copy of the epistles.

On an (unedited) commentary of Metrophanes of Smyrna (ninth century), see Krumbacher, Geschichte der byzantinischen Litteratur<sup>2</sup>, pp. 78 f. 132; B. Georgiades in Ἑκκλησιαστικὴ Ἀλήθεια, vol. iii, 1882-3.

(b) Latin.

Augustine's commentary on James, to which he refers in Retract. ii, 32, is lost, but it does not appear to have been an important work.

The only extant Latin commentaries earlier than the thirteenth century are the Expositio of the Venerable Bede († 735), Migne, Patrologia latina, vol. xciii, and the Glossa ordinaria of Walafrid Strabo († 849), Migne, vol. cxiv, which is in part dependent on Bede.*

Other writers are frequently referred to as if they had written commentaries on James. But the Complexio of Cassiodorus († 575) on James (Migne, vol. lxx, cols. 1577-1580) is only a brief summary of the epistle; the Proæmium of Isidore of Seville († 636; Migne, vol. lxxiii, col. 178) consists of but four lines; Alulf's industry (eleventh century;

* On the character and influence of Bede's expositions, see B. Gikalaki, Bruno, Bischof von Segni, Abt von Monte Cassino, Münster, 1898, pp. 210 ff.

Migne, vol. lxxix, cols. 1381-1386) has been devoted merely to selecting nine appropriate passages from various works of Gregory the Great († 604). Three homilies of Rabanus Maurus († 856; Migne, vol. cx, hom. 34, 40, 42) treat of the Epistle of James, but, doubtless to the advantage of his hearers, were not original, since they consist merely of blocks copied bodily from the Expositio of Bede.

Other pre-reformation Latin commentators on James were Martin of Leon († 1203; Migne, vol. ccix), Hugo of St. Cher († 1262), Nicholas of Gorham († 1295), Nicholas de Lyra († 1340), Gregory of Rimini († 1358), John Hus († 1415), Dionysius Rickel († 1471), Laurentius Valla († 1457).

(c) Syriac.

Isho' Dad (c. 850), commentary on James, 1 Peter, 1 John, published by Margaret D. Gibson, The Commentaries of Isho' Dad of Merv, vol. iv (Horae Semiticae, x), 1913, pp. 36f.

Dionysius Bar-Salibi († c. 1171), commentary on the Apocalypse, Acts, and Catholic epistles, Corpus scriptorum christianorum orientalium, Series syriaca, vol. ci. Bar-Salibi states that from earlier commentators he had found but brief expositions of the Catholic epistles.

Gregorius Bar-Hebræus († 1286), The Store of Mysteries, written 1278. The commentary on James was published by M. Klamroth, Gregorii Abulfaragii Bar Ebhraya in Actus Apostolorum et Epistolas catholicas adnotationes, Göttingen, 1878. See J. Göttsberger, Barhebræus und seine Scholien zur Heiligen Schrift (Biblische Studien, v), 1900.

§ 2. MODERN.

Since 1500 many commentaries on James have been written.* At the head of the list worthily stands Erasmus, Novum Instrumentum omne . . . cum annotationibus, 1516; Paraphrases, 1521.

The comments of the most important of the Roman Catholic expositors can be read in J. de la Haye, Biblia magna, Paris,

* On the history of the detailed exegesis Huther (in Meyer), 1870, is better than the revision by Beyschlag, 1897.

1643, and Biblia maxima, Paris, 1660; Critici sacri, London, 1660; M. Poole, Synopsis criticorum, London, 1669-96. Mention may be specially made of Vatablus (†1547), whose scholia, however, as published in Critici sacri, were deemed to be "alicubi doctrinis calvinianis aspersa," and of Est (†1613), Cornelius à Lapide (†1637), and Calmet (†1757).

The chief Roman Catholic commentaries of the nineteenth century are those of Bisping, 1871; Schegg, 1883; Trenkle, 1894; Belser, 1909; Meinertz (in Tillmann's Heilige Schrift des N. T.), 1912.

An extensive and useful list of the Roman Catholic commentators is given by F. S. Trenkle, Der Brief des heiligen Jacobus, 1894, pp. 56 f.; see also Cornely, Historica et critica introductio, vol. i, pp. 691-732; vol. ii, pp. 687 f.; Meinertz, Jakobusbrief, pp. 216-219, 289-311. For the names of less noteworthy expositors, see H. Hurter, Nomenclator literarius recentioris theologiae catholicae, 1871-86 (covering the period 1564-1869); J. Quétif and J. Échard, Scriptores ordinis prædicatorum recensiti, Paris, 1719-21, especially vol. ii, p. 947 (Dominican expositors to 1720).

From Protestant theologians have proceeded innumerable commentaries on James. Of the older, Calvin (†1564), Grotius (†1645), H. Hammond (†1660), Bengel (†1751), deserve mention. The essential parts of Grotius and of many minor works are to be found collected in Critici sacri, 1660, and Matthew Poole's Synopsis criticorum, 1669-96. In the important service of presenting the illustrative material, H. Heisen, Novae hypotheses interprelandae epistolae Jacobi, Bremen, 1739, now a rare book,* contains vast but ill-digested collections on many passages of the epistle; J. J. Wetstein's indispensable Novum Testamentum graecum, 1751-2, which gathers in convenient form the stores of previous writers, stands with but one later rival. M. Schneckenburger's excellent little Annotatio ad epistolam Jacobi, 1832, is still of independent value. The most useful modern commentaries are those of J. E. Huther (in Meyer), 1857, 1870; revised, without thoroughgoing altera-

B. Mayor, The Epistle of St. James, 1892, 1910 (a thesaurus of learned material), and H. Windisch (in Lietzmann's Handbuch zum Neuen Testament), 1911. Mayor's bibliography gives a very complete list of modern works.

COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLE OF JAMES.

CHAPTER I.

EPISTOLARY SALUTATION (1).

δοῦλος. In the O. T. "servant" (עֶבֶד, doûlos, θεράπων, παῖς) is regularly used for "worshipper" (e. g. Ps. 34<sup>22</sup>); and the corresponding verb is used also of the worship of heathen gods (e. g. 1 Kings 9<sup>8</sup>). Names compounded with 'abd ("servant") and the name of God, or of a god, are found in Hebrew, and were common among the Phœnicians, Aramæans, and Arabs (EB, art. "Names," § 37). In particular the prophets are called Jahveh's servants (e. g. Amos 3<sup>7</sup>), and the term is applied as a title of distinction to such worthies as Moses (e. g. 1 Kings 8<sup>53</sup>), David (e. g. 2 Sam. 3<sup>18</sup>), and many others. The "servant of Jahveh" of Is. 42-53 presents, however, a different problem, and is translated παῖς κυρίου.

In the N. T. δοῦλοι is used in the sense of "attached worshippers" in Lk. 2<sup>29</sup>, Acts 4<sup>29</sup> 16<sup>17</sup>, Rev. 1<sup>1</sup>. Paul describes himself as δοῦλος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ in the address of Romans (Rom. 1<sup>1</sup>) and (with the inclusion of Timothy) in Philippians (Phil. 1<sup>1</sup> δοῦλοι X. I.), and a similar expression is found in Jude vs. 1 and 2 Pet. 1<sup>1</sup>; cf. Tit. 1<sup>1</sup> δοῦλος θεοῦ. It is not a term of special humility, nor is it to be understood as involving a claim to the rank of a prophet or distinguished leader. The writer simply declares himself to belong to Christ as his worshipper, and so commends himself to readers who are also Christians. Note that Paul uses this form of description in the address of Romans and Philippians only, two epistles in which he is consciously striving to avoid the assumption of personal authority and to emphasise the give and take of an equal comradeship in faith.

The immediate origin of this use of δοῦλος is Semitic. A few Greek analogies are collected in Elsner, Observationes sacrae, 1720, on Acts 16<sup>17</sup>; cf. Reitzenstein, Hellenist. Mysterienreligionen, 1910, pp. 66, 78. The use of δοῦλος has no bearing on the question of the identity of the author.

ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς, the Christian church conceived as the true Israel, inheriting the rights of the ancient people of God.

The conception of the tribes of the Hebrew people as twelve in number, both at first in the nomadic and later in the settled condition, arose very early, but seems at all times to have been a theory rather than a fact of observation. It may have had an astronomical origin, like some other sacred uses of the number twelve. In Canaan the tribes came to indicate mainly a territorial division, although the theory of an original hereditary classification was maintained. In and after the exile much stress was laid on the idea of the twelve tribes, as is to be observed in the pictures of the past presented by the priest code and the writings of the chronicler, as well as in Ezekiel's ideal state (e. g. Gen. 35<sup>22-26</sup>, Num. 2, Ezra 6<sup>17</sup>, Ezek. 48<sup>1-7</sup>, 22-24).

In later Jewish literature they are frequently referred to. Faithful Israelites within and without Palestine claimed and valued their membership in a tribe (Tobit, Tob. 1<sup>1</sup>; Judith, Jud. 8<sup>1</sup>; Anna, Lk. 2<sup>21</sup>; Paul, Rom. 11<sup>1</sup>, Phil. 3<sup>1</sup>; cf. Letter of Aristas, §§ 32, 39, 46, 47-59, six scholars ἀπ' ἐκάστης φυλῆς). The "twelve tribes" denoted the whole commonwealth of Israel, and a strong sentiment was associated with the phrase. Cf. Ecclus. 44<sup>21</sup>; Ass. Mos. 2<sup>11</sup>; Apoc. Baruch 1<sup>1</sup> 62<sup>1</sup> 63<sup>1</sup> 64<sup>1</sup> 77<sup>1</sup> 78<sup>1</sup> 84<sup>1</sup>; Acts 26<sup>1</sup> τὸ δωδεκάφυλον ἡμῶν; on Test. XII Patr. Benj. 9<sup>1</sup>, cf. Charles, in HDB, "Testaments of the XII Patriarchs"; the conception is implied in the plan of the Testaments. In Clem. Rom. 31<sup>1</sup> 55<sup>1</sup> the emphasis on the salvation of the whole Jewish nation resident in various parts of the dominions of Ahasuerus is unmistakable.

The reunion of the twelve tribes in Palestine was a part of the Jewish Messianic hope. See references in Schürer, GJV<sup>1</sup>, ii, pp. 537 f.

This aspect of the hope is suggested in Orac. Sibyll. ii, 171 ἡνίκα δὴ δεκάφυλος ἀπ' ἀνατολῆς λαὸς ἔξει (of uncertain date and origin), cf. iii, 249, λαὸς δὲ δωδεκάφυλος. The expectation lies at the basis of Mt. 19<sup>12</sup>, and appears again in the eschatological sealing of twelve thousand from each tribe in Rev. 7<sup>4</sup>, and in the twelve gates of the twelve tribes in Rev. 21<sup>12</sup>, where, however, the conception and phraseology are derived from Ezek. 48<sup>30-33</sup>.

The term "twelve tribes" thus stands for the integrity of the nation Israel, as it once actually existed, and as it still abides in idea and spiritual fellowship and common hope.

The only known cases where an expression like αἱ δώδεκα φυλαί is used by itself of the nation Israel are the passages Orac. Sibyll. ii, 171 δεκάφυλος ἀπ' ἀνατολῆς λαός, and iii, 249 λαός δὲ δεκάφυλος. These are highly poetical allusions, and do not point to any common prose usage at variance with the rule. See Zahn, Einleitung, i, § 3, note 4.

The Christian church, according to the fundamental and universal N. T. view, stands as the successor of the Jewish ἐκκλησία.

Hence the attributes of the nation Israel may be applied directly to the church. Cf. Gal. 3<sup>7-9</sup>, where descent from Abraham is so ascribed to all believers, Col. 2<sup>11</sup>, etc. This is one of the fundamental thoughts of Luke and Acts; as well as of the Epistle to the Hebrews, where everything pertaining to the old national religion is shown to belong also (only in the reality, not the shadow) to the new religion. So Barn. 4<sup>6, 13-14</sup>, where the covenant is shown to belong to the new people. See Zahn, Einleitung, i, § 3, note 9. The conception of the new Israel as made up of a symbolical twelve tribes is in accord with this underlying principle of the apostolic age and presents in itself no difficulty. Rev. 21<sup>12</sup>, where no thought of any Jewish-Christian particularism is present, approaches closely to such a use. The positive reasons for assuming this meaning are discussed below.

A symbolical use of δώδεκα φυλαί somewhat different from that of Jas. 1<sup>1</sup> is found in Hermas, Sim. ix, 17, where of twelve mountains, from which come the stones used to build a tower (i. e. the church), it is said: δώδεκα φυλαί εἰσιν αἱ κατοικοῦσαι ἔθλον τὸν κόσμον. To them the Son of God has been preached through the apostles, while these twelve tribes are themselves further explained as δώδεκα ἔθνη with highly diverse characteristics. Here the twelve tribes, or nations, plainly signify all the nations of the world. The unusual designation is doubtless chosen in order to indicate that as these have now become the field of God's redemptive activity, they have come into the place of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. The whole world is the new δωδεκάφυλον of the Christian dispensation.

ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ. διασπορά means "scattering," "dispersion" (either act or state); cf. Jer. 15<sup>7</sup>, Dan. 12<sup>2</sup> (LXX), Test. XII Patr. Asher, 7, 1 Pet. 1<sup>1</sup>. Hence, with the article, ἡ διασπορά is used concretely of the Jews so dispersed, or even of the districts in which they were dispersed. Thus Deut. 30<sup>4</sup>, Neh. 1<sup>3</sup>, Judith 5<sup>18</sup>, Jn. 7<sup>35</sup>, of either the dispersed or the land of dispersion; Ps. 147<sup>2</sup>, Is. 49<sup>6</sup>, 2 Macc. 1<sup>27</sup>, Ps. Sol. 8<sup>24</sup>, of the dispersed. Here it is more naturally taken of the state of dispersion, although the other view is possible. With the article the expression means "in the well-known state of dispersion," not merely "in dispersion" in the abstract sense. Cf. Ps. 139,

The noun διασπορά (Deut. 28<sup>25</sup>) is used but a few times in the O. T. It is not a regular representative of any one Hebrew word, and is never used to translate any of the derivatives of נָחַץ. The verb διασπείρω is more common (cf. also the simple σπείρω, Zech. 10<sup>9</sup>), especially in Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel; it represents a number of Hebrew verbs, most frequently some form of פָּרַשׁ (30 times out of 58).

διασκορπίζω (in literary use chiefly late, see Lex.) is often used in much the same sense as διασπείρω to refer to the dispersion of Israel, but tends to denote more violent action, as the scattering of a discomfited foe (e. g. Ps. 59<sup>11</sup>, Jer. 51<sup>30-31</sup>). διασκορπισμός, found but five times, remained a descriptive word, and did not attain to the technical significance of διασπορά. σκορπίζω is less common and weaker; σκορπισμός is found but once (in Aq. Sym. Theod. Jer. 25<sup>11</sup> [32<sup>10</sup>]).

The more common noun to denote the Jewish exile is ἀποικία, in eight cases ἀποικισία, a word peculiar to LXX (L. and S.), to which corresponds the factitive verb ἀποικίζειν. The noun means "emigration," "colony," "body of colonists," with a range of meaning parallel to that of διασπορά; it is used as a technical term to denote the captivity or the captives, usually representing נָחַץ, "exile," e. g. Ezra 4<sup>1</sup> υἱοὶ τῆς ἀποικίας, Jer. 29<sup>1, 4, 22, 31</sup>. ἀποικία seems to be synonymous with μετοικία (μετοικισία Mt. 1<sup>11</sup>), which is less common, but represents about the same group of Hebrew words.

παροικία, "sojourn," "residence as a stranger," is used a few times to represent נָחַץ, Ezra 8<sup>22</sup> υἱοὶ τῆς παροικίας, 1 Esd. 5<sup>7</sup> ἐκ τῆς αἰχμαλωσίας τῆς παροικίας, where the parallel translation of Ezra 2<sup>1</sup> has ἀποικίας. In Ecclesiasticus prol. τοῖς ἐν τῇ παροικίᾳ, it is used in the same sense. It refers to the "sojourn" from the point of view of the land of temporary residence, while ἀποικία refers to the same fact from the point of view of the home land from which those sojourning abroad are absent.

Of the words here considered, αἰχμαλωσία is obviously the most limited in application, referring to the captivity proper; ἀποικία and μετοικία are applicable to any portion, as well as to the whole, of the body of Jews residing in foreign parts; διασπορά can only be used with reference to the general scattering of Jews. Thus the αἰχμαλωσία was (e. g.) in Babylon; the Jews in any one place could be called ἀποικία (Jer. 29<sup>1</sup>, etc.); while ἡ διασπορά means the scattered state, or the scattered section, of the Jewish nation.

Thus διασπορά, always standing in contrast with the idea of visible unity of the nation, calls attention, usually with a certain pathos, to the absence of that unity, whereas ἀποικία might refer to a colonisation wholly free from such associations. This is especially marked in 2 Macc. 12<sup>27</sup> ἐπισυνάγαγε τὴν διασπορὰν ἡμῶν, ἐλευθέρωσον τοὺς δουλεύοντας ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν. Here ἀποικία would have been weak. Accordingly διασπορά is the appropriate word in Jas. 1<sup>1</sup>.

The statement sometimes made (e. g. Carr, Camb. Gk. Test. pp. xxx, 10; less unguardedly Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus of Nazareth, i, pp. 6 f. 9; Mayor<sup>2</sup>, p. cxxxvii) that ἡ διασπορά, "when used without any qualifying words," means the Eastern Hebrew-speaking part of the dispersion, seems to be wholly without foundation.

The dispersion of the Jews over the world began through capture in war and emigration for trade as early as the ninth century B.C. (cf. 1 Kings 20<sup>34</sup>). The forced emigration of many thousands from both the northern and southern kingdom to Assyria and Babylonia, the voluntary settlement in the Greek period of large numbers of Jews in Alexandria and other Egyptian cities, and in Cyrenaica, the planting of Jewish communities of traders and peaceful residents in Antioch and other places of Syria, Asia Minor, and Greece, and the colony of Jews in Rome (partly owing its origin to the captives brought thither by Pompey in 63 B.C. and afterward liberated), as well as those in other cities of Italy, had created by the first century after Christ a vast Jewish population dispersed in all parts of the civilised world, and perhaps amounting to 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 souls.

For a representative list of diaspora Jews, cf. Acts 2<sup>9-11</sup>; see also Philo, In Flaccum, 7, and Legat. ad Caium, 36.

EB, art. "Dispersion" (H. Guthe); Schürer, GVV, § 31; Mommsen, Provinces of the Roman Empire, ch. 11.

Although perhaps the majority of Jews in the diaspora had thus come to reside abroad through voluntary emigration undertaken out of motives of private interest, and although, apart from occasional disturbances with their neighbours and oppression from the governments, the situation of the Jews seems to have been one of privilege and prosperity, yet the dispersion is uniformly represented by Jewish writers as a grave misfortune destined to be ended by the divine intervention.

The cause of this was partly the fact that the first large emigration was the forced removal in the captivities, so that the tradition became established that exile was an evil, to be followed, when the punishment was over, by return (cf. Is. 40<sup>14</sup>). This traditional feeling seems to be reflected in Ps. Sol. 9<sup>2</sup> ἐν παντὶ ἔθνει ἡ διασπορὰ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ κατὰ τὸ ῥῆμα τοῦ θεοῦ· ἵνα δικαιοθῇς, ὁ θεός, ἐν τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ σου ἐν ταῖς ἀνομίαις ἡμῶν. But the view was confirmed by the attitude of Palestinian Judaism, as it came to lay increasing emphasis on a national ritual purity, which could not be preserved in unclean lands, and on a restoration of national glory in Palestine under the Messiah, in which all faithful Jews would share. The dispersion was an evil because it interfered with the consummation of τὰ ἀγαθὰ Ἰσραὴλ ἐν συναγωγῇ φυλῶν (Ps. Sol. 17<sup>44</sup>). These ideal interests must have been powerfully reinforced by practical motives springing from the actual danger, observed ever since the beginning of the exile, that Jews exposed to the corrupting influences of foreign life would relax their strictness of morals, indulge in heathen abominations, and lose their religion—and their souls. (Ezek. 14<sup>1-11</sup>, Dan. 1<sup>8</sup>; note the disappearance of the ten tribes in the Assyrian captivity, attested, e. g., by Jos. Ant. xi, 5<sup>1</sup>).

In times of foreign oppression and distress the desire for restoration of the dispersed must have been strengthened by the sense of weakness felt by the pious community in Palestine (the "poor"), suffering the lack of the help, both moral and material, which might be afforded by the return of the Jews of the diaspora. It then seemed evident that the glory of Israel could be finally manifested only through the concentration in the Holy Land of the power and wealth of the sons of Israel, now scattered among the nations. So, e. g., Tob. 13<sup>14</sup>.

ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ. For the whole phrase there are two possible interpretations:

(1) "To the dispersed People of God," i. e. the Christian church at large;

(2) "To the Jews, residing in the dispersion."

Many different applications of these two senses, separately or in combination, will be found in the commentaries. The second interpretation given above is almost always qualified by a limitation to Christian Jews. This suits the general character of the epistle, but is in no way suggested by the phrase itself, and cannot be regarded as legitimate.

In this phrase, ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ applies not to a part but to the whole of ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς, and the only possible meaning is that all the twelve tribes are "in the dispersion." It is not legitimate, although common in the commentaries, to take the phrase as meaning "those tribes (of the twelve) which are in the dispersion" (as if it read ταῖς ἐκ τῶν δώδεκα φυλῶν ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ), or "those persons from the twelve tribes who are residing in the dispersion" (as if τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν δώδεκα φυλῶν διασπαρείσιν, so Ps.-Euthal. in his argumentum, Migne, Patrologia græca, vol. lxxxv, col. 676).

The permissibility of the first interpretation has already been shown. According to it the Christian church is here not merely designated as the new Israel, but is further described by ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ as now dispersed in an alien world. For the ideas on which this latter conception rests the N. T. furnishes abundant illustration. It includes, perhaps, the suggestion of a temporary state with the hope of a future reunion.

It is simpler to take ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ thus as a mere further description of the church than to suppose (with Zahn, Einleitung, i, p. 53, and § 3, note 6) that it is added in order specifically to distinguish the new twelve tribes (the Christians), which were all in the dispersion, from the old (the Jews), which were partly in the home land of Israel. Other characteristics would have lain far nearer to hand if this had been the direct purpose.

The new Israel has a heavenly metropolis (Gal. 4<sup>26</sup> ἡ δὲ ἄνω Ἱερουσαλὴμ . . . ἣτις ἐστὶν μήτηρ ἡμῶν, Heb. 12<sup>22</sup> προσ-εληλύθατε Σιών ὅρει καὶ πόλει θεοῦ ζώντος, Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουρανίῳ), where is the seat of its commonwealth (Phil. 3<sup>20</sup>). But for the present it sojourns in exile, 1 Pet. 1<sup>1</sup> ἐκλεκτοῖς περιδημιόμοις διασπορᾶς, 1<sup>17</sup> τὸν τῆς παροικίας ὑμῶν χρόνον,

The idea is intimately connected with the phraseology, though not with the real meaning, of certain O. T. passages, Ps. 39<sup>13</sup>, ὅτι πάροικος ἐγὼ εἰμι ἐν τῇ γῇ καὶ παρεπιδημος καθὼς πάντες οἱ πατέρες μου, Ps. 119<sup>19</sup>, Lev. 25<sup>23</sup>, 1 Chron. 29<sup>15</sup>, Gen. 47<sup>9</sup>.

The interpretation of the conception of men as strangers and sojourners, given by Philo, De cherub. 34, is not parallel to the Christian idea in James, but it shows how the O. T. passages attracted attention and could lend themselves to such use. The thought of Hermas, Sim. i, resembles Philo, not James.

In early Christian thought the idea gained great prominence. Cf. the classical expression in Ep. ad Diognetum 5 πατρίδας οἰκοῦσιν ἰδίᾳς, ἀλλ' ὡς πάροικοι· μετέχουσι πάντων ὡς πολῖται, καὶ πάνθ' ὑπομένουσιν ὡς ξένοι· πᾶσα ξένη πατρίς ἐστὶν αὐτῶν, καὶ πᾶσα πατρίς ξένη; also 2 Clem. Rom. 5<sup>1, 5, 6</sup>; and note the usage by which the church, or the Christians, in any locality are said not to reside but to "sojourn" (παροικεῖν) there, Polyc. Phil. inscr. τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ θεοῦ τῇ παροικούσῃ Φιλίππου; Mart. Polyc. inscr.; Euseb. H. e. iv, 23; Ep. eccl. lugd. et vienn. in Euseb. H. e. v, 1<sup>3</sup>.

The emphasis on this mode of thought in later times is familiar, and reaches its classical expression in the great poem of Bernhard of Cluny, De contemptu mundi.

From this usage seems to have arisen the ecclesiastical sense of the word παροικία, that is, "the body of (Christian) aliens" in any place, and so parochia, "parish." The earliest cases of this use of the noun are Mart. Polyc. inscr., Irenæus in Eus. H. e. v, 24<sup>15</sup>, and Apollonius in Eus. H. e. v, 18<sup>9</sup>.

παροικία in the sense of the local body of Christians thus took a different turn of meaning from διασπορά, which in this Catholic epistle refers to the whole church; but the metaphor underlying the derived sense is the same in both cases, and up to a certain point the development was parallel. Each takes one side of the meaning of ἐκκλησία. See Lightfoot, note on Clem. Rom. inscr.

The words, then, mean: "To that body of Twelve Tribes, the new Israel, which has its centre in Heaven, and whose members, in whatever place on the earth they may be, are all equally away from home and in the dispersion!" This interpretation implies in the writer a mind capable of conceiving clearly and expressing tersely a strongly figurative expression, but that is not too much to ascribe to the author of this epistle. Cf. 1<sup>17</sup>, 18, 23<sup>11</sup>, etc. It also assumes that the underlying conception was familiar to the readers.

Of this "symbolical"* interpretation of the address of the epistle important recent advocates have been Holtzmann, von Soden, Jülicher, and Zahn. The chief objection brought against it is that it is deemed inappropriate to the simple address of a letter. But, first, we have here not a real letter sent to a definite group of readers, but a literary form for a tract, or diatribe. And, secondly, even in a real letter the greeting (as distinguished from the outside address intended to guide the carrier) naturally contains not only expressions of affection but descriptive phrases intended to suggest the writer's relations and attitude to the person addressed, and to some extent even the thoughts with which the letter was to be occupied. This may be seen in all the epistles of Paul, and in the epistles of Ignatius, Clement of Rome, and Polycarp. The same concern is not absent from the greetings and subscriptions of modern letters.

In opposition to the interpretation here defended, the view of the address most widely held adopts the second of the two interpretations referred to above, taking ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς as if merely equivalent to τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις. The serious grammatical difficulties involved are usually ignored. The phrase is then (in part arbitrarily) limited so as to mean, "to extra-palestinian Jewish Christians" (Beyschlag). Inasmuch as the phrase itself is notably unlimited, this exegetical procedure seems too violent to be permissible. Moreover, if this were the meaning, we should expect to find, as we do not, in the epistle itself some specific allusion to the distinctive circumstances of readers so carefully limited in the address; in fact (see Introduction), the epistle best suits conditions in Palestine. This is felt by Beyschlag, who suggests, wholly without warrant, that διασκοπά may refer to everything outside of Jerusalem.

* The interpretation here defended is not strictly "symbolical," for the Christians doubtless believed themselves to be in a real, and not a symbolical, sense the true Twelve Tribes of Israel, who had succeeded by legitimate spiritual inheritance to the title of the People of God. Their attitude was not different from that which has, for instance, made the O. T. a Christian book, and has often expressed itself in the characteristic language of modern Protestantism.

The various forms of this view of the address, intended to obviate one or another of the difficulties under which it labours, require highly artificial and improbable hypotheses. No kind of early, or of ingenious, dating can bring us to a time when a writer addressing Jewish Christians in distinction from unbelieving Jews would have addressed them as "the twelve tribes," if by the term he meant "the Jews"; and if the term is here used for "the People of God," then the limitation to Jewish Christians is not contained in it.

To suppose, on the other hand, a time when Christian believers still regarded themselves as full members of the commonwealth of Israel, and had not yet broken their social and religious connection with it (so, e. g., B. Weiss, Einleitung<sup>3</sup>, p. 398) gives no aid whatever in understanding the phrase itself. No time after the crucifixion is known to us when a Christian teacher could expect a respectful hearing for a didactic tract from both converted and unconverted Jews in the dispersion at large, or would have felt such responsibility for the general moral instruction of all diaspora Jews alike as this writer shows. The promptness of the separation of Christians and Jews in the diaspora is illustrated by all the mission narratives of Acts. Nor can even the unsupported guess of a current limitation of the term ἡ διασκοπά to Southern Syria or Babylonia or elsewhere overcome the difficulty that the epistle itself nowhere hints at conditions in any way peculiar to or characteristic of any such district.

On the view of Harnack, that the address was a later addition by a different hand, see Introduction, pp. 47 f. Under such a view the spurious address might have no definite meaning or might have the meaning advocated above. Spitta, who takes the phrase in the literal sense, "To the Jews in the dispersion," avoids some of the difficulties by regarding the epistle as originally Jewish and not Christian, but he misses the grammatical structure explained above, and has likewise no reason to give for the inexplicable limitation to the diaspora. The "symbolical" interpretation alone will account for that.

χαίρειν scil. λέγει (cf. 2 John, vv. <sup>10</sup>, <sup>11</sup>); the ordinary opening salutation of a Greek letter, like Latin salutem, shown by the countless papyrus letters preserved to have been current in Greek letters of all periods; cf. Acts 15<sup>23</sup> 23<sup>26</sup>, and examples in Deissmann, Bibelstudien, pp. 209–216; Witkowski, Epistolae græcae privatae, 1907; J. A. Robinson, Ephesians, 1903, pp. 276 f.; Milligan, Thessalonians, 1908, pp. 127 f. See also G. A. Gerhard, "Untersuchungen zur Geschichte des griechischen

The ordinary greeting of a Hebrew or Aramaic letter seems to have resembled, as among other peoples, the salutation of daily life. Thus (Aramaic) Dan. 4<sup>1</sup> (3<sup>10</sup>) ܡܢ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܥܠܝܗܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܡܠܟܝܢ ܕܝܗܝܐ, 6<sup>14</sup>; Ezra 4<sup>17</sup> 5<sup>1</sup> ܡܢ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܥܠܝܗܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܡܠܟܝܢ ܕܝܗܝܐ (cf. 1 Esd. 6<sup>7</sup> χαίρειν as a translation of the same original). The Peshitto has  for χαίρειν in Jas. 1<sup>1</sup>. The same formulas appear in the three Aramaic circular letters of Rabban Gamaliel (first or second century after Christ; texts in G. Dalman, Aramäische Sprachproben, 1896; preserved in the Mishna, jer. Sanh. 18<sup>4</sup> and elsewhere) ܡܢ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܥܠܝܗܝܢ, and in the N. T. χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη κληθυσθε, 1 Pet. 1<sup>3</sup>, 2 Pet. 1<sup>3</sup>, Jude 2 ἔλεος ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη καὶ ἀγάπη κληθυσθε. In 2 Macc. 1<sup>1</sup> εἰρήνην ἀγαθὴν and χαίρειν are combined, but the characteristic N. T. enlargements, e. g. χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, Phil. 1<sup>3</sup>, 1 Pet. 1<sup>3</sup> are probably not due to a combination of the Greek and Hebrew greetings, but to the influence of the priestly benediction, Num. 6<sup>24-26</sup>; cf. J. C. T. Otto, "Ueber den apostolischen Segensgruss," in Jb. f. deutsche Theol. 1867, pp. 678-697.

For similar (probably Jewish) expansion cf. the letter to the nine and one-half tribes in Apoc. Bar. 78<sup>1</sup>: "Thus saith Baruch the son of Neriah to the brethren carried into captivity: mercy and peace" (cf. Gal. 6<sup>10</sup>). See Zahn, Einleitung, i, § 6, note 7.

In this general connection the following verses from the epitaph of Meleager, Anthol. græca, vii, 419 (Brunck, i, p. 37), are worth quoting:

ἀλλ' εἰ μὲν Σύρος ἔσσι, Σαλάμ, εἰ δ' οὖν σὺ γὰρ Φοινίξ, Αὔθονις, εἰ δ' Ἑλλήν, Χαῖρε, τὸ δ' αὐτὸ φράσον.

I. ON CERTAIN RELIGIOUS REALITIES (1<sup>2</sup>-2<sup>26</sup>).

The paragraphs of chs. 1 and 2 are held together by the common underlying purpose of denouncing shams and emphasising various aspects of reality in religion. (See Introduction, supra, pp. 3-5). The first half of this division (1<sup>2-18</sup>) treats of matters relating to the development of character, the second

2-4. The moral use of Trial. Out of trial comes steadfastness and steadfastness makes perfect.

The epistle begins as a didactic essay, and plunges at once into the subject without the introductory paragraph of congratulation, good wishes, assurance of prayerful interest in the person addressed, etc., which is a characteristic standing feature in Greek letters, both Christian and secular; cf. the papyrus letters referred to above, pp. 127 f., together with Rom. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., 1 Cor. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., 2 Cor. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., Eph. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., Phil. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., Col. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., 1 Thess. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., 2 Thess. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., 2 Tim. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., Philem. 4 ff. 1 Pet. 1<sup>1</sup> ff., 2 Jn. 4, 3 Jn. 2-4. It is noticeable that those N. T. "epistles" which have most the character of literary works rather than letters lack this opening paragraph. Thus 1 Timothy and Titus (which for other reasons also are recognised as containing less genuine matter than 2 Timothy), Hebrews, 1 John, Jude, Revelation, and perhaps 2 Peter (where this purpose, however, may be intended by 1<sup>1</sup> ff.). The spurious epistles of Plato and others, which are literary pieces and not real letters, have likewise for the most part nothing corresponding to the opening paragraph common in letters of daily life.

2. πάσαν χαράν. πάσαν, "all," is here used, not to denote strict completeness of extension, but as an intensifying adjective, in the sense either of "full," "supreme" (summus) or (less naturally) of "nothing but," "unmixed" (merus, Ger. lauter). Cf. Eur. Med. 453, πᾶν κέρδος ἡγοῦ ζήμουμένη φυγῇ.

πᾶς in the singular means (1) "every," "every kind of" (ἕκαστος, παντοίος), having this sense only with anarthrous nouns, e. g. Phil. 4<sup>11</sup> πάντα ἄγιον, Mt. 4<sup>11</sup> πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν μαλακίαν, Col. 4<sup>11</sup> ἐν παντὶ θελήματι τοῦ θεοῦ;

(2) "whole," "entire" (ὅλος, totus). In this sense it is used (a) with the article, and in either the attributive or predicate position, Mt. 8<sup>11</sup> πᾶσα ἡ πόλις, Acts 20<sup>18</sup> τὸν πάντα χρόνον; (b) with anarthrous nouns, e. g. Plato, Leges 708 B ξυνάπασα πόλις, "a whole city." The rule is that the noun lacks the article in cases where without πᾶς it would not have had it.

(3) From this sense of "whole," is derived the meaning "full," "complete," and so "utter" (summus). In this sense it is used with abstract nouns in cases where the idea of quantity or extension is not present, and is found both with and without the article.

Thus Plato, Leges 646 B εἰς ἀπασαν φαυλότητα, "into utter degradation" (Jowett); Leges 952 A πᾶση σπουδῇ μανθάνειν, "with all (complete) zeal"; Respub. 575 A ἐν πάσῃ ἀναρχίᾳ καὶ ἀνομίᾳ, "in all (complete) anarchy and lawlessness"; Thuc. i, 86<sup>a</sup> τιμωρητέα παντὶ σθένει, "with full strength," iv, 11<sup>a</sup> προθυμία πάσῃ χρώμενοι καὶ παρακλεισμεῖ; Polyb. i, 39<sup>a</sup> εἰς πᾶσαν ἤλθον ἀπορίαν, i, 15<sup>a</sup> τῆς πάσης ἀλογίας πλήρη, iii, 77<sup>a</sup> ἐν τῇ πάσῃ φιλανθρωπίᾳ, iv, 27<sup>a</sup> τῆς πάσης γέμει κακοπραγμοσύνης, xi, 4[7]<sup>a</sup> τῆς πάσης ἀλογιστίας ἐστὶ σημεῖον, "a proof of complete folly"; Epict. iii, 5<sup>10</sup> χάριν σοι ἔχω πᾶσαν.

The Hebrew כָּל, whose meanings had a development in general like those of πᾶς, does not appear to have advanced to this usage.

In the N. T. this usage is common, especially in Paul, where πᾶς becomes a favourite intensifying adjective. Thus Acts 4<sup>22</sup> μετὰ παρηρησίας πάσης, 5<sup>18</sup> 17<sup>11</sup> μετὰ πάσης προθυμίας, 20<sup>18</sup> 23<sup>1</sup> πάσῃ συνείδῃσαι ἀγαθῇ πεπολιτευμαι, 28<sup>11</sup>, Rom. 7<sup>a</sup> 15<sup>18</sup> πληρώσαι ὑμᾶς πάσης χαρᾶς καὶ εἰρήνης, 15<sup>14</sup>, 2 Cor. 1<sup>a</sup> 8<sup>7</sup> πάσῃ σπουδῇ, 9<sup>a</sup> πᾶσαν αὐτάρκειαν (notice the various senses of πᾶς exemplified in this verse) 12<sup>12</sup>, Eph. 1<sup>a</sup> ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ φρονήσει, 4<sup>18</sup> 5<sup>a</sup>, Phil. 1<sup>a</sup> 2<sup>20</sup> μετὰ πάσης χαρᾶς, Col. 1<sup>a</sup> 11<sup>11</sup>. <sup>11</sup> ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ, 3<sup>10</sup>, 2 Thess. 2<sup>a</sup> 10, 1 Tim. 1<sup>18</sup> and 4<sup>a</sup> πάσης ἀποδοχῆς δέξις, 2<sup>11</sup> 5<sup>a</sup> 6<sup>1</sup>, 2 Tim. 4<sup>a</sup>, Tit. 2<sup>18</sup> 3<sup>a</sup>, 1 Pet. 2<sup>18</sup> 5<sup>10</sup>, 2 Pet. 1<sup>a</sup> σπουδῇ πᾶσαν. In some of these instances, as would be expected, it is not easy to decide certainly between the meaning "full" and the meaning "each" or "every."

It is evident that this usage is a Greek and not in any degree a Semitic idiom. This sense is the probable one in Jas. 1<sup>a</sup>.

(4) Still another use of πᾶς is found in cases where the word, through its position in the sentence, becomes translatable by "unmixed," "wholly," "only," merus, tantummodo, Ger. lauter. Thus Plato, Phileb. 27 E, 28 A οὐ γὰρ ἂν ἡδονὴ πᾶν ἀγαθὸν ᾦν . . . οὐδὲ γ' ἂν λύπη πᾶν κακόν, † Protag. 317 B ἐγὼ οὖν τούτων τὴν ἐναντίαν ἀπασαν ὄδον ἐλήλυθα, "the entirely opposite course," Thuc. vi, 37<sup>a</sup> ἐν πάσῃ πολεμικῇ Σικελίᾳ (i. e. "Sicily which is wholly hostile"), Jos. Ant. iv, 5<sup>1</sup> διὰ πάσης ἐρήμου βέων, "flowing through nothing but desert." In Prov. 11<sup>18</sup> ἐπιθυμία δικαίων πᾶσα ἀγαθὴ, the Hebrew קַיִם, tantummodo, is translated by πᾶσα, ‡ and the sense is "The desire of the righteous is solely good" (i. e. both in its character and in its results).

The Latin omnis is used in this same way, as Cic. N. D. ii, 21, nulla in celo nec fortuna nec temeritas, nec erratio nec varietas inest: contraque omnis ordo, veritas, ratio, constantia.

This method of heightening the effect of the noun is, in many cases, closely akin to the sense discussed under (3) and can be fully distinguished from that only in extreme instances. It is likely that the Greek writer was often, perhaps usually, not conscious of the distinction which our analysis reveals.

† This passage from the Philebus is specially significant because πᾶν agrees with the predicate, not, as the logical analysis might seem to require, with the subject (ἡδονή).

‡ Hatch and Redpath, s. v. wâr, have overlooked this fact.

See Schleusner, Lexicon in Nov. Test. s. v. κᾶς (Glasgow, 1824, pp. 358 f.); Krüger, Griechische Sprachlehre für Schulen, i, § 50, 11, Anm. 7-13; also Stephanus, Thesaurus, s. v. κᾶς (especially ed. Hase and Dindorf, Paris, 1831-65, vol. vi, col. 568).

χαράν "joy," i. e. "occasion of joy" (cf. Lk. 2<sup>10</sup>, 1 Thess. 2<sup>19</sup>), a predicate accusative, the sentence with δταν suggesting the real object of ἡγήσασθε.

Probably an allusion is intended to χαίρειν, v. <sup>1</sup>. The writer sets forth one notable source of joy. For similar use of the greeting, cf. Tob. 5<sup>10</sup> (Cod. N) εἶπεν αὐτῷ· χαίρειν σοι πολλὰ γένοιτο. καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς Τωβεὶθ εἶπεν αὐτῷ· τί μοι ἐτι ὑπάρχει χαίρειν; Ps.-Plato,* Epist. viii, 352 B Πλάτων τοῖς Δίῳνος οἰκεῖοις τε καὶ ἑταίροις εὖ πράττειν· ἃ δ' ἂν διανοηθέντες μάλιστα εὖ πράττοιτε ὄντως πειράσσομαι ταῦθ' ὑμῶν κατὰ δύναμιν διεξελθεῖν.

This paronomasia is possible only in Greek, and is a strong argument against the theory of a Semitic original. Cf. Zahn, Einleitung, i, § 6, note 6. The Peshitto has ܡܕܢܐ, which obliterates the play on words.

ἡγήσασθε. The aorist is perhaps used because the writer is thinking of each special case of πειρασμός. For the distinction, often significant, between present and aorist, in commands and in prohibitions, see Winer, § 43. 3, § 56. 1 b, Buttmann, § 139. 6, J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 173 f.

As an address, ἀδελφοί, with or without the additional words, is common in the O. T., e. g. Judg. 19<sup>22</sup>, 1 Sam. 30<sup>22</sup>, 1 Chron. 28<sup>2</sup>, Judith 7<sup>30</sup>, Tob. 7<sup>3</sup>, cf. Apoc. Bar. 78<sup>2</sup> 80<sup>1</sup>; and still more in the N. T., e. g. Rom. 7<sup>4</sup>, 1 Cor. 1<sup>10</sup>, 1 Thess. 1<sup>4</sup>, 1 Jn. 3<sup>12</sup>; cf. Clem. Rom. 1<sup>1</sup> 4<sup>7</sup>, 2 Clem. Rom. 1<sup>1</sup> 10<sup>1</sup> 14<sup>1</sup>, Ign. Eph. 16<sup>1</sup>, Hermas, Vis. iii, 10<sup>3</sup>, iv, 1<sup>5</sup> 5, Ep. Barnab. 2<sup>10</sup>, and see Goodspeed's Index patristicus for other references. It is especially characteristic of the speeches in Acts, cf. 1<sup>16</sup> 2<sup>29</sup> 3<sup>17</sup> 6<sup>3</sup> 7<sup>2</sup> 26 13<sup>16</sup> 26, 28 15<sup>7</sup> 13 22<sup>1</sup> 23<sup>1</sup> 5, 6 28<sup>17</sup>; and it may be suspected that it belonged to the homiletical style of the synagogue and was brought thence into Christian hortatory language. It is a form appropriate to a member of a strictly defined society, such as the Jewish or the Christian brotherhood, addressing other members whom he recognises as equals. This character distinguishes the Christian parenetic literature from the O. T. Wisdom-literature. In the latter the conventional form is "My son," υἱέ (Prov. 1<sup>8</sup> and passim), or τέκνον (Ecclus. 2<sup>1</sup> and passim), and the situation is conceived to be that of an old man bequeathing his accumulated wisdom to his child or pupil. Cf. Toy on Prov. 1<sup>8</sup>.

In the N. T. (1) the noun πειρασμός, "trial" (which in secular writers is known only in Dioscur. Præf. 5 τοὺς ἐπὶ τῶν παθῶν πειρασμούς, "experiments on diseases"), has clearly the meaning "affliction," that being one of the most common tests of character. Lk. 22<sup>28</sup>, Acts 20<sup>19</sup> μετὰ πάσης ταπεινοφροσύνης καὶ δακρύων καὶ πειρασμῶν, cf. Ecclus. 2<sup>1</sup> 33<sup>1</sup>, Lk. 8<sup>13</sup> (cf. Mk. 4<sup>17</sup>), Heb. 11<sup>27</sup>, 1 Pet. 1<sup>6</sup>. See E. Hatch, Essays in Biblical Greek, pp. 71 f., Harnack, "Zwei Worte Jesu," in Sitzungsberichte der kgl. Preuss. Akademie, 1907, pp. 942-947, both of whom give this meaning to πειρασμός in the Lord's Prayer, Mt. 6<sup>13</sup>. (2) The whole group of words is used to refer to temptation to sin, since that, primarily an assault, is at the same time a test. This development of the meaning accords with the secular use of πειράω, πειράζω, which may be illustrated from the derivative πειρατής, "pirate," i. e. "attacker." Thus in Jas. 1<sup>14</sup> the words are flatly used in the sense "seduce to evil." So Mt. 4<sup>1</sup> 6<sup>13</sup>; the name ὁ πειράζων for Satan, Mt. 4<sup>1</sup>, 1 Thess. 3<sup>5</sup>, 1 Cor. 7<sup>5</sup> 10<sup>13</sup>, 1 Tim. 6<sup>9</sup>, etc.; cf. the Jewish prayer in Berachoth, 60 b, translated by Taylor, Sayings of the Jewish Fathers<sup>2</sup>, p. 128. That both meanings can be employed by the same writer in neighbouring contexts may be illustrated by the use of the English "trial" in its several senses.

In the passage before us πειρασμοῖς evidently means "trials," i. e. adversities, which befall us from without and against our will. According to James (vv. 13 ff.) "temptations" spring mainly from within and could not be a subject for rejoicing. There is no reason, however, to think especially of religious persecution; what James has in mind is the strain put upon faith in Providence and in a good God by the fact that God permits his people to fall into distress of various kinds and to be oppressed by grievous poverty. The people here addressed are not a missionary outpost among the heathen; nothing in the epistle (not even 2<sup>7</sup> and 4<sup>1</sup> ff.) implies the situation revealed by 1 Pet. 4<sup>12</sup> ff. They appear to be largely poor and struggling people, subject to the hardships of the poor, cf. 1<sup>10</sup> 2<sup>1</sup> ff. 6. Note the prevalent eagerness to have, implied in 4<sup>1-2</sup>.

The classical and higher literary use employed ποικίλος in senses naturally derived from its original meaning of "many-coloured," "variegated"; thus it meant "complex," "elaborate," "diversified," "intricate," "subtle," "ambiguous," "unstable," nearly always in contrast with "simple" (Schmidt, Synonymik, iv, pp. 361 f.). In classical writers hardly any clear case can be found of the looser meaning, "various," "divers," παντοδαπός, in which the word appears in later and less cultivated use, so Mt. 4<sup>24</sup>, Mk. 1<sup>34</sup>, Lk. 4<sup>40</sup>, Heb. 2<sup>4</sup>, 1 Pet. 1<sup>8</sup>, 3 Macc. 2<sup>8</sup>, ποικίλαις καὶ πολλαῖς ἐδοκίμασας τιμωρίαις, 4 Macc. 7<sup>4</sup> 17<sup>7</sup> μητέρα ἑπτὰ τέκνων δι' εὐσέβειαν ποικίλας βασάνους μέχρι θανάτου ὑπομείναςαν, 18<sup>21</sup>. Hermas offers many cases of this meaning; see Goodspeed, Index, and note especially Mand. iv, 2<sup>3</sup> πολλαὶ καὶ ποικίλαι, Mand. x, 1<sup>5</sup> χερσοῦνται ἀπὸ τῶν ἀκανθῶν καὶ βοτανῶν ποικίλων, Sim. vii, 4 θλιβῆναι ἐν πάσαις θλίψεσι ποικίλαις. So Ep. ad Diogn. 12<sup>1</sup> ποικίλοις καρποῖς κεκοσμημένοι, Mart. Polyc. 2<sup>4</sup>.

For non-christian use, cf. Aelian, V. h. ix, 8 ὁ δὲ . . . πολλαῖς καὶ ποικίλαις χρησάμενος βίου μεταβολαῖς, Synes. Ep. 114. The popular weakening of the strict sense of the word, and its employment merely to give greater fulness to the phrase, is seen at its extreme in 2 Tim. 3<sup>8</sup>, Tit. 3<sup>3</sup>, Heb. 13<sup>3</sup>, where ποικίλος seems wholly superfluous. The use here in James is probably of that general type, with little or no emphasis; it is less probable that the word is used here to intensify the idea of πειρασμοῖς, "trials however various," implying number and severity.

3. τὸ δοκίμιον, "test," "proof," here of the act of proving. The word more properly refers to the means of testing (κριτήριον, cf. Prov. 27<sup>21</sup> δοκίμιον ἀργυρίῳ, and references in Lex. and Mayor), but this does not give an adequate sense here, although adopted by Mayor and some older commentators.

In the similar passage 1 Pet. 1<sup>7</sup>, τὸ δοκίμιον cannot well mean "proof"; δοκίμιον is there a neuter adjective from δοκίμιος = δέκιμος, "proved," "good." See Deissmann, Neue Bibelstudien, 1897, pp. 86 ff.

In other usage also the word makes a natural advance from the idea of "test" to that of "purification" (as with metals) or of "training" (as Herodian, ii, 10<sup>6</sup> δοκίμουν δὲ στρατιωτῶν κάματος ἀλλ' οὐ τρυφή).

τῆς πίστεως] om B<sup>3</sup> ff syr<sup>h</sup><sup>al</sup>. The evidence against the words raises a bare suspicion that they were added by conformation to 1 Pet. 1<sup>7</sup>. To omit them does not alter the general sense.

The word πίστις clearly means in James that fundamental attitude of the man's soul by virtue of which he belongs to the people of God, cf. 1<sup>6</sup> 2<sup>1</sup>, 5, 14. It is taken for granted that the natural effect of πειρασμοί is to imperil persistence in faith. See Introduction, p. 40.

δοκέω, δοκονή have in classical Greek a considerable range of meanings springing from the root-meaning "stay" and including "endurance," "firmness," "submission," "patience," etc.

ὑπομονή, meaning "constancy," was thus a virtue highly prized by the Jews and frequently exemplified by cases from their history beginning with that of Abraham, notably those mentioned in 4 Maccabees. It is, indeed, a characteristic Jewish virtue of all time, and the Christian emphasis on it is a part of the inheritance from Judaism. Chrysostom calls it βασιλις τῶν ἀρετῶν.

But heathen writers show that the virtue was also admired in the Greek and Roman world. The word ὑπομονή is hardly ever used for the virtue in general (yet cf. Plut. Apophris. lacon. Agesil. 2), but it is not uncommon with reference to the endurance of specific hardship. See the quotations given by Trench, especially Cicero's definition of the Roman quality patientia in De invent. ii, 54 patientia est honestatis aut utilitatis causa rerum arduarum ac difficilium voluntaria ac diuturna perpessio.

In the N. T. ὑπομονή is chiefly used in this sense of unswerving constancy to faith and piety in spite of adversity and suffering. Thus Lk. 8<sup>15</sup> 21<sup>19</sup> ἐν τῇ ὑπομονῇ ὑμῶν κτήσεσθε τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν, Rom. 15<sup>4</sup> 1., 2 Pet. 1<sup>6</sup>, Heb. 10<sup>36</sup> 12<sup>1</sup>, Rev. 2<sup>2</sup>. 3. 19. The noun and its verb occur but rarely in the Synoptic Gospels, and not at all in John, but are characteristic of the vocabulary of Paul and the apostolic age. 1 Pet. 2<sup>20</sup>, where ὑπομένω is twice used in the sense of "endure uncomplainingly and patiently," is an exception to the more usual emphasis on loyal "firmness."

In Jas. 1<sup>3</sup> ὑπομονή means, then, not "uncomplaining patience" (so, e. g., Spitta), nor merely "endurance" as a single act or concrete state, but rather that permanent and underlying active trait of the soul from which endurance springs—"constancy," or "steadfastness," thought of as a virtue. Cf. 5<sup>11</sup>, where the meaning is the same, and 1<sup>12</sup>.

Spitta's contention that James has in 1<sup>2-4</sup> the case of Abraham already in mind is not made out. Abraham was indeed one of the great examples of constancy in faith in spite of searching trial, cf. Judith 8<sup>11-17</sup>, 1 Macc. 2<sup>21</sup>, Eccclus. 44<sup>20</sup>, 4 Macc. 6<sup>14</sup>, 11 9<sup>21</sup> 13<sup>12</sup> 14<sup>20</sup> 16<sup>11</sup> f. 17<sup>6</sup> 18<sup>20</sup>, 21, Jubilees 17, 19, Pirke Aboth, v. 4. But there is no reason whatever for assuming in our verse reference to any specific case of constancy.

4. δέ, "and," not "but." This verse turns to remoter, but essential, consequences of πειρασμοί.

ἔργον τέλειον ἐχέτω. We must not rest satisfied with constancy, but must see that it produces those further fruits which make up completeness of character. The thought, here very summarily expressed, is the same as in Rom. 5<sup>21</sup>, 2 Pet. 1<sup>5-7</sup>. For the phrase cf. Jn. 17<sup>4</sup> τὸ ἔργον τελειώσας.

The constancy here referred to is constancy in faith, from which completed character may be expected to spring. This is closely similar to the characteristic Pauline doctrine of faith working itself out (or, made effective) in love, Gal. 5<sup>6</sup>, Rom. 6<sup>1-22</sup>, cf. v. 22 νυνὶ δὲ ἐλευθερωθέντες ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας . . . ἔχετε τὸν καρπὸν ὑμῶν εἰς ἁγιασμόν. This inclusive and fundamental thought well fits its position at the opening of the tract.

"To have a perfect work" is taken by many to mean "be perfected," in respect either to duration until the end or to other completeness. The verse would then urge merely that the constancy which trials produce be made by voluntary effort a perfect constancy.

This is a less natural meaning for the phrase itself, and it gives a weaker sense than the interpretation "produce its full and proper fruits," which is, moreover, supported by the analogy of Rom. 5<sup>21</sup>, 2 Pet. 1<sup>5-7</sup>.

For the use of τέλειος, referring to the natural aim of moral effort, the O. T. use of עֲדָלָה, "perfect," "innocent," and עֲלֵזָה, "perfect," "single-(minded)," laid ample foundation. So עֲדָלָה, עֲלֵזָה, of Noah, Gen. 6<sup>9</sup>; Job 1<sup>1</sup>; Deut. 18<sup>18</sup>, Ps. 18<sup>28</sup> 37<sup>27</sup>, and often; עֲלֵזָה, 1 Kings 8<sup>61</sup> 11<sup>4</sup>.

A similar Greek use grew out of the simple meaning of the word, cf. Philo, Leg. all. ii, 23 (of Moses in contrast to the ordinarily immature man), and other passages quoted by Mayor, also the Stoic sayings in Stobæus, Anthol. ii, 7, 11, g, πάντα δὲ τὸν καλὸν καὶ ἀγαθὸν ἄνδρα τέλειον εἶναι λέγουσι διὰ τὸ μηδεμῶς ἀπολείπεσθαι ἀρετῆς, ii, 7, 5, b 8 (ed. Heeren, ii, p. 117). See HDB, "Perfection," and J. Weiss, Erster Korintherbrief, 1910, pp. 73-75.

As τέλειος means "complete" in the sense of "perfect," "finished," so ὁλόκληρος means "complete in all its parts," no part being wanting or inadequate. The distinction is well illustrated by Trench, Synonyms, xxii. ὁλόκληρος is not common with a moral application, cf. 4 Macc. 15<sup>17</sup> τὴν εὐσέβειαν ὁλόκληρον, Wisd. 15<sup>8</sup> ὁλόκληρος δικαιοσύνη. It was customary to use the two words together merely to give a fuller phrase, as here, cf. Col. 4<sup>12</sup>, τέλειοι καὶ πεπληροφορημένοι. Many examples of such use of τέλειος and ὁλόκληρος in combination, drawn from Philo, Plutarch, Dio Chrysostom, etc., will be found in Mayor, Trench, Spitta, and Heisen, Novæ hypotheses, pp. 312 ff. Compare English "meet and right," "good and sufficient," German "klipp und klar," etc.

5-8. Divine aid to this perfectness is gained through Prayer. But blessings come only in answer to the prayer of steadfast loyalty in faith.

On the idea of God as ready and desirous to give to all, cf. Ps. 145<sup>15-19</sup>, Ps. Sol. 4<sup>12-15</sup>, Test. XII Patr. Gad 7<sup>2</sup>, Philo, De cher. 34, Leg. alleg. i, 13 ὅτι φιλόδορος ὦν ὁ θεὸς χαρίζεται τὰ ἀγαθὰ πᾶσι καὶ τοῖς μὴ τέλειοις, Mt. 5<sup>46</sup> 7<sup>7</sup>, 11.

* The limitation of σοφία to the wisdom requisite for the state of mind recommended in v. <sup>5</sup> is not justified.

† But there is no reason for thinking, with Spitta, that Solomon is in mind in the passage, or that in v. <sup>5</sup> πᾶσιν refers to "all" in contrast to Solomon alone.

by what follows to have a moral sense, "graciously," "bounteously," "generously."

The adverb is found only here in the N. T., but the noun ἀπλότης is not uncommon. In Rom. 12<sup>8</sup> ὁ μεταδίδους ἐν ἀπλότητι, 2 Cor. 8<sup>2</sup> 9<sup>11, 13</sup> τῇ . . . ἀπλότητι τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτούς, Jos. Antiq. vii, 13<sup>4</sup> τῆς ἀπλότητος καὶ τῆς μεγαλοψυχίας, it means "liberality," "generosity," "single-minded attention to the gift with no thought of self"; cf. Ecclus. 20<sup>14</sup>, "The gift of a fool shall not profit thee; for his eyes are many instead of one"; also Plut. De adulat. p. 63 F, τὸ δὲ τοῦ κόλακος ἔργον οὐδὲν ἔχει δίκαιον, οὐδ' ἀπλοῦν, οὐδ' ἐλευθέριον. Sanday, on Rom. 12<sup>8</sup>, quotes the important passages from Test. XII Patr. Issach. (περὶ ἀπλότητος) in which the various qualities of the single-minded man are set forth; note especially Issach. 3<sup>8</sup>, on generosity, and see also Charles's valuable notes in his English translation, 1908, pp. 102-105.

The adverb ἀπλῶς itself is used in this sense ("freely," "liberally") by Hermas, Mand. ii, 4 and 6.

μὴ ὀνειδίζοντος describes God's giving as full and free, in contrast to the meanness which after a benefaction calls it unpleasantly to the mind of the one benefited. That this disagreeable trait of human nature was prominent in ancient times is attested, e. g. by Ecclus. 41<sup>22</sup> μετὰ τὸ δοῦναι μὴ ὀνειδίξει, 18<sup>15-18</sup> 20<sup>14-16</sup> (cf. also, for a slightly different aspect, 29<sup>22-28</sup>), Plut. De adulat. p. 64 A, πᾶσα ὀνειδιζομένη χάρις ἐπαχθῆς καὶ ἄχαρις, Schol. on Eur. Orest. 1238 ὀνειδῆ, τῶν εὐεργεσιῶν τὰς ὑπομνήσεις; see further Wetstein and Mayor.

6. ἐν πίστει, cf. 5<sup>18</sup>. Explained by μηδὲν διακρινόμενος as meaning "in constancy (ὑπομονή) of faith." "Faith" is the fundamental religious attitude, not an incidental grace of character, and the words mean here more than "in confidence that he will receive his request." ὁ διακρινόμενος is a man whose allegiance wavers, not one tormented by speculative intellectual questionings, which do not fall within James's horizon. This is

διακρινόμενος, "wavering," "doubting," literally "divided," "at variance with one's self"; cf. Mt. 21<sup>21</sup>, Mk. 11<sup>23</sup>, Rom. 4<sup>20</sup> (cf. Sanday's note) 14<sup>23</sup>, Jas. 2<sup>4</sup>. This sense is found in Protev. Jac. 11, Clem. Hom. ii, 40 (see the passages in Mayor), but has not been pointed out in writings earlier than the N. T. For ἀδιάκριτος in the corresponding sense, cf. Ign. Trall. 1 διάνοιαν ἀδιάκριτον ἐν ὑπομονῇ. In Ign. Magn. 15, Eph. 3, Test. XII Patr. Zab. 7<sup>2</sup>, the meaning is not certainly the same as here; see Zahn, Ignatius von Antiochien, 1873, p. 429, note 1.

κλύδωνι, "wave of the sea," but with emphasis rather on size and extension than on separateness and succession (κύμα), hence often used in a collective sense. It probably means here "the surge of the sea," "the billowing sea"; cf. Lk. 8<sup>24</sup> ἐπετίμησεν τῷ ἀνέμῳ καὶ τῷ κλύδωνι τοῦ ὕδατος, Wisd. 14<sup>5</sup>.

ῥιπιζομένῳ, "blown," literally, "fanned," from ῥίπις, "fan." Adds here nothing essential to the idea of ἀνεμζομένῳ. The two participles together explain the comparison.

ῥιπίζω is frequently used in secular writers of the action of wind on the sea. See the passages quoted in Heisen, p. 444, and the full discussion in Hort, ad loc. Cf. the fragment in Dio Chrys. Or. 32, p. 368:

δῆμος ἄστατον κακόν,
καὶ θαλάττῃ πάνθ' ὁμοιον ὑπ' ἀνέμου ῥιπιζεται,

Philo, De gig. 11 ἰδὼν γάρ τις τὸν ἐν εἰρήνῃ συνεχῇ πόλεμον ἀνθρώπων, οὐ κατὰ τὰ ἔθνη καὶ χώρας καὶ πόλεις αὐτὸ μόνον συνιστάμενον, ἀλλὰ καὶ κατ' οἰκίας, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ καθ' ἓνα ἄνδρα ἕκαστον, καὶ τὸν ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἄλεκτον καὶ βαρὺν χειμῶνα, ὃς ὑπὸ βιαιοτάτης φορᾶς τῶν κατὰ βίον πραγμάτων ἀναρριπίζεται, τεθαύμακεν εἰκότως, εἴ τις ἐν χειμῶνι εὐδῖαν καὶ ἐν κλύδωνι κυμαίνουσης θαλάσσης γαλήνην ἄγειν δύναται, and other passages in Wetstein and Mayor.

The point of comparison in James is the ordinary instability of the heaving sea, not the unusual violence of a storm. The sentence is made less forcible through the excessive elaboration of the figure. For the figure itself, cf. passages quoted above, Is. 57<sup>20</sup>, Ecclus. 33<sup>2</sup>, ὁ ὑποκρινόμενος ἐν αὐτῷ [sc. νόμῳ] ὡς ἐν καταγίδι πλοίου, Eph. 4<sup>14</sup> with Robinson's note and references, Jude, v. 12. Note also the elaborate metaphor of 4 Macc. 7<sup>1-3</sup>, where the man of steadfast piety is described as a helmsman τεναχ προpositi; and see references in Mayor, and Heisen, pp. 451 f.

τοῦ κυρίου, i. e. God, cf. v. 5. In Paul always, or nearly always, of Christ, except in quotations.

8. ἀνὴρ δόξυχος, either subject of λήμψεται, making the sentence a general statement (WH. text, R.V. mg.), or else in apposition with the unexpressed subject (WH. mg. R.V.), which it further describes. The latter construction has analogies, 3<sup>2</sup>, 4<sup>12</sup>, and yields a much more forcible sense. It underlies the punctuation of Cod. B and the rendering of the Peshitto.

Hort argues for R.V. mg. on the ground that ἐκείνος naturally refers not to the waverer just mentioned, but to the more remote "man that lacketh wisdom." But the phrase is highly effective with reference to the person just described elaborately, and on the other hand it is impossible to see why the warning that follows, which is of universal application, should be addressed with such special emphasis only to "the man that lacketh wisdom."

The rendering of A.V. based on the late Vulgate text (not Codd. AF), vir duplex . . . inconstans est, is still less acceptable.

άνήρ gives more emphasis to the idea (notice the emphatic position) than would be given by δίψυχος alone. The change from άνθρωπος (v. 7) to άνήρ is probably merely for the sake of variety. Cf. Hermas, Mand. ix, 6 πᾶς γὰρ δίψυχος άνήρ.

δίψυχος, "double-minded," "double-souled," i. e. "with soul divided between faith and the world" (cf. 4<sup>a</sup> ἡ φιλία τοῦ κόσμου ἔχθρα τοῦ θεοῦ ἐστίν), "Mr. Facing-both-ways."

The word is not found in secular literature nor in LXX or N. T. except here and Jas. 4<sup>a</sup>, but is correctly formed according to the analogy of διχόνους (Philo, De merc. meretr. 4, p. 269), διγλωσσος (ibid.; Ecclus. 5<sup>a</sup>), διγλωμος, δικάρδιος, διλογος (1 Tim. 3<sup>a</sup>), διπρόσωπος (Test. XII Patr. Aser 2, etc.), διστομος, δισώματος, etc. It is not at all likely to be the coinage of this writer.

In early Christian writings δίψυχος and διψυχέω (see Goodspeed, Index) are frequent, occurring in Hermas about forty times, especially in Mand. ix; Clem. Rom. 11<sup>a</sup> (of persons like Lot's wife), 23<sup>a</sup> πόρρω γενέσθω ἀπ' ἡμῶν ἡ γραφή αὐτή, ὅπου λέγει· Ταλαίπωροί εἰσιν οἱ δίψυχοι, οἱ διστάζοντες τὴν ψυχὴν, οἱ λέγοντες· ταῦτα ἠκούσαμεν καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν, καὶ ἰδοὺ γεγηράκαμεν, καὶ οὐδὲν ἡμῖν τούτων συνβέβηκεν (cf. Lightfoot, ad loc.). In 2 Clem. Rom. 11<sup>a</sup> the same quotation is given as from ὁ προφητικὸς λόγος, which Lightfoot conjectures to be "Eldad and Modad." Cf. Didache 4<sup>a</sup>, Barn. 19<sup>a</sup> 20<sup>a</sup> (διπλοκαρδία), 2 Clem. Rom. 19 (διψυχ(αν)); see Mayor for some later instances.

A. H. Clough's poem, entitled Dipsychus, has brought the word into English.

The idea so neatly put by δίψυχος has similar expression in a series of phrases found in classical Greek, such as δίζα θυμὸν ἔχοντες (Homer), ἐγένοντο δίχα αἱ γνώμαι (Herodotus), etc., all meaning "be at variance," "be in doubt."

The word is found in N. T. only here and 3<sup>4</sup>, in LXX once (Is. 54<sup>11</sup>, as parallel to ταπεινή), Sym. three times; ἀκαταστασία is found twice in LXX, twice in Sym., and five times in N. T.

The adjective and noun are used to describe character in Polybius, vii, 4<sup>6</sup> (of a youth).

ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ὁδοῖς αὐτοῦ, i. e. his whole conduct is like his attitude toward faith. For the Hebraism "ways" in the sense of "habitual course of conduct," see Ps. 91<sup>11</sup> 145<sup>17</sup>, Prov. 3<sup>4</sup> (πάσαις ὁδοῖς σου), and Prov. passim, Wisd. 2<sup>16</sup>, Eccus. 11<sup>20</sup> 17<sup>15</sup>, 19. etc., Jer. 16<sup>17</sup>, Ezek. 7<sup>8</sup>, 9, Acts 14<sup>16</sup>, 1 Cor. 4<sup>17</sup>; cf. v. 11 below, ἐν ταῖς ποταμῶν αὐτοῦ.

The expression ἀκατάστατος ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ὁδοῖς αὐτοῦ might mean "unsettled (tempest-tossed) in all his experiences" with reference to the ill effects of such διψυχία in actual life. For ἀκατάστατος in this sense, cf. Is. 54<sup>11</sup>, and for ὁδοί Ps. 91<sup>11</sup>, Rom. 3<sup>18</sup> (where the quotation is taken as relating not to conduct but to experience). This is the view of many commentators, ancient and modern, but the sentence seems to call for a characterisation of the man rather than a prophecy of his fortunes.

9-11. Poverty no evil and wealth no advantage.

The writer returns to the πειρασμοί of v. 2. That these fall heavily on the poor man is not an evil for him but an elevation, of which he should boast as a privilege. Likewise let the rich man boast when brought low by adversity; for riches are transitory things, and he should be only glad to lose them in a way which conduces to his moral welfare, cf. Lk. 6<sup>20-26</sup>.

9. καυχάσθω, "boast," over a privilege or a possession, corresponding to χαρὰν ἡγήσασθε. The word is used in the O. T. of "any proud and exulting joy," and so here (in secular Greek it did not have this development), cf. Ecclus. 10<sup>21</sup> 39<sup>8</sup>, Jer. 9<sup>23</sup> 1. τάδε λέγει κύριος· μὴ καυχάσθω ὁ σοφὸς ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ αὐτοῦ, καὶ μὴ καυχάσθω ὁ ἰσχυρὸς ἐν τῇ ἰσχύϊ αὐτοῦ, καὶ μὴ καυχάσθω ὁ πλούσιος ἐν τῷ πλούτῳ αὐτοῦ, ἀλλ' ἡ ἐν τούτῳ καυχάσθω ὁ καυχώμενος, συνέειν καὶ γινώσκειν ὅτι ἐγὼ εἰμι κύριος ὁ ποιῶν ἔλεος καὶ κρίμα καὶ δικαιοσύνην ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ὅτι ἐν τούτοις τὸ θέλημά μου, λέγει κύριος, Ps. 32<sup>11</sup>, 2 Cor. 11<sup>30</sup>, cf. 23-28, 12<sup>9</sup>.

The lowly should find the elevation he so much craves in the moral gain achieved through trials, cf. 1 Cor. 7<sup>22</sup>.

Others make ὕψος refer to the heavenly reward of the pious. This is, of course, included in the advantage of the lowly, but it is not said here that the elevation is only future.

The exaltation of the humble was the promise of the prophets (e. g. Is. 54<sup>11</sup> 1) and the hope of Israel, Prov. 3<sup>24</sup>, Ps. 18<sup>27</sup> 138<sup>6</sup>; cf. Lk. 14<sup>11</sup> ὅτι πᾶς ὁ ὑψῶν ἑαυτὸν ταπεινωθήσεται καὶ ὁ ταπεινῶν ἑαυτὸν ὑψωθήσεται. These are now realised. But note the moralistic turn given to apocalyptic ideas; in 1 Pet. 1<sup>8</sup> the eschatological framework of Jewish and Christian thought is far nearer the surface of the writer's consciousness.

10. The two interpretations of v. 10 divide on the question whether or not ἀδελφός is to be supplied with ὁ πλούσιος.

(1) It is more natural to supply it. In that case the rich man is a Christian, and ταπεινώσει refers to the external humiliation and loss brought him by the πειρασμοί of v. 1, which from the Christian point of view are a proper ground of boasting. τῷ ὕψει and τῇ ταπεινώσει both refer to the same or similar experiences, but are not quite parallel expressions, since ὕψος is used of a moral and spiritual exaltation, ταπεινώσις of external and material humiliation. Apart from this lack of parallelism the chief objections to this view, which is that of most commentators (to the names given by Beyschlag, add von Soden, Spitta, Scott, Zahn, Knowling, Hort), are (1) that elsewhere in the epistle the rich are spoken of (2<sup>6-8</sup> 5<sup>1-8</sup>) as bad men outside the Christian society, and (2) that παρελεύσεται has to be taken as denoting "lose his wealth," and v. 11 in a corresponding sense.

(2) According to the other interpretation, ἀδελφός is not to be supplied with ὁ πλούσιος. Then, since the verb to be supplied is surely καυχᾶσθω (although Alford proposed καυχᾶται, "Ecumenius" αἰσχυνέσθω, and Grotius ταπεινούσθω), that word must be taken ironically, and τῇ ταπεινώσει referred to the humiliation and shame of the Day of Judgment (cf. 5<sup>1</sup> ἐπὶ ταῖς τάλαιπωρίαῖς ταῖς ἐπερχομέναις) set forth plainly in παρελεύσεται and μαρανθήσεται—"let the rich man find his boast (if he can!) in his coming abasement from the lofty station he now occupies."

This involves serious difficulties: (1) the unnatural refusal to supply ἀδελφός, (2) the excess of fierce irony in the use of the understood καυχᾶσθω, (3) the lack of adaptation of the thought in any way to the idea of πειρασμοί, which still seems to govern the context. On the other hand, this interpretation would be in accord with 5<sup>1</sup>, and would in some respects well suit the following context, vv. 10-11.

This latter view is held by many older commentators, and by Huther, Alford, Weiss, Beyschlag, but seems on the whole to involve greater difficulties than those of the view first stated. The rich man here contemplated is, therefore, to be understood as a Christian.

τῇ ταπεινώσει. The bringing low of the rich through loss of property, standing, etc., cf. Lk. 14<sup>8</sup>, Phil. 3<sup>21</sup>. This might be by reason of his Christian profession, for the rich man was peculiarly exposed to loss in time of persecution (cf. the result of anti-semitic persecution at Alexandria, as described by Philo, Leg. ad Gaium, 18); but it might well come about through other causes, and would always be a πειρασμός that would put a severe strain on faith in the goodness of God.

τῇ ταπεινώσει is taken by some as strictly parallel to τῷ ὕψει and so meaning Christian "humility." "Let the rich man make his humble spirit, not his wealth, his boast," cf. Ecclus. 3<sup>18</sup> 7<sup>17</sup>, ταπεινώσον σφόδρα τὴν ψυχὴν σου . . . ὅτι ἐκδίκησις ἀσεβοῦς πῦρ καὶ σκώληξ, and the saying of Hillel,* "My humility is my greatness and my greatness is my humility." This is possible, but does not suit the connection with πειρασμοί quite so well, and one would expect ταπεινοφροσύνη (1 Pet. 5<sup>9</sup>).

"God alone, it says (Deut. 10<sup>31</sup>), shall be thy boast (αὑχῆμα) and greatest glory. And pride thyself neither on wealth nor on glory nor high position nor beauty of person nor strength nor the like things over which the empty-minded are wont to be elated; reckoning that in the first place these things have no share in the nature of good, and that secondly they are subject to speedy change, fading (μαραίνόμενα), as it were, before they have well blossomed (ἀνθῆσαι)." For other references, cf. Spitta, p. 26, note 3.

ὅτι ὡς ἄνθος χόρτου παρελεύσεται. Through the same interest in warning against high estimation of riches which appears in 2<sup>18</sup>. 6-8 5<sup>1-6</sup>, the writer is led on in this clause and v. 11 to describe the certainty of loss to the rich. The passage sets forth the sure fate of the typical rich man.

used here not only of grass proper, but of any green herbage (so of lilies, Mt. 6<sup>28</sup>, <sup>30</sup>, of grain, Mt. 13<sup>30</sup>), and the flower thought of is any flower growing in the field, just as in the Hebrew. The original comparison in Is. 40<sup>6f.</sup> relates to life in general, for which the spectacle familiar in the Orient of the grass and flowers suddenly withered by heat and drought is a common figure; thus Ps. 90<sup>5f.</sup> 102<sup>11</sup> ὡσεὶ χόρτος, 103<sup>15</sup>, Job 14<sup>2</sup> ὥσπερ ἄνθος, Is. 51<sup>12</sup>; and (of the wicked) Ps. 37<sup>2</sup>, Job 15<sup>30-32</sup>.

παρελεύσεται. The rich man "will pass away," "disappear," i. e. in any case his riches will pass away and he will cease to be a rich man. (This is merely elaborated in vv. 11 and 12.) Therefore he should congratulate himself on the opportunity of moral gain described in vv. 2-4 and on the ταπείνωσις which substitutes real values for transitory ones.

παρελεύσεται includes the consequences of death, but also the work of moth and rust (Mt. 6<sup>19</sup>, <sup>30</sup>). This is better than, with some interpreters, to take παρελεύσεται as meaning "die," for the rich is no more sure to die than the poor. The rich needs to be reminded not of the certainty of death but of the transitoriness of wealth.

11. ἀνέτειλεν. The aorists are gnomic, as in v. 24; but cf. Is. 40<sup>7</sup> LXX. See Burton, Moods and Tenses, § 43, Blass, § 57, 9, Buttmann (Thayer's translation), p. 202; Winer (Moulton's translation), pp. 346 f.; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 135.

The Greek word is used in the sense not only of "fall off," but also of "fail," "come to naught." The specific meaning "fade" is contained in the Hebrew לָבַד, and so in translation became attached to ἐκπίπτειν.

ἡ εὐπρέπεια, "comeliness," "goodly appearance." Only here in N. T., cf. Ecclus. 24<sup>14</sup> (of olive-tree). The word is common in LXX as in classical writers, with a suggestion of fitness to the object and its relations, and so sometimes gains a notion of stateliness or majesty, which καλός, κάλλος, do not have. Cf. Ps. 93<sup>1</sup> κύριος ἐβασίλευσεν, εὐπρέπειαν ἐνεδύσατο, Wisd. 7<sup>20</sup> εὐπρεπεστέρα ἡλίου, and other references given by Hort.

τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ, "of its face," i. e. "form and appearance."

Under the influence of the extended meanings of the Hebrew פָּנָה the word πρόσωπον proceeded in translation to the sense "surface." Cf. Job 41<sup>11</sup> (of stripping off the crocodile's scales) τίς ἀποκαλύψει πρόσωπον ἐνδόσεως αὐτοῦ; 2 Sam. 14<sup>20</sup> τὸ πρόσωπον τοῦ ῥήματος τούτου, "the situation, attitude, appearance, of this affair"; Gen. 2<sup>8</sup> τὸ πρόσωπον τῆς γῆς. From this to the meaning "outward form and appearance" is not a long step.

ἐν ταῖς πορείαις αὐτοῦ is figurative, like ὁδοῖς, v. <sup>8</sup>, and refers to the experiences and fortunes of the rich, cf. Prov. 2<sup>7</sup> 4<sup>27</sup> τὰς δὲ πορείας σου ἐν εἰρήνῃ προάξει. To take it of literal journeys is wholly inappropriate to the context.

Hort's interesting interpretation is probably oversubtle: "The common interpretation of 'goings' as a mere trope for 'doings' seems too weak here. The force probably lies in the idea that the rich man perishes while he is still on the move, before he has attained the state of restful enjoyment which is always expected and never arrives. Without some such hint of prematurity the parallel with the grass is lost."

μαρανθήσεται, "wither," "waste away." So Wisd. 2<sup>8</sup>, Job 24<sup>14</sup>, but outside the Bible more often of the decay of other things than plants. The reference is to the loss of riches and earthly prosperity, not to eternal destiny.

12. The Reward of Steadfastness.

This verse recurs to the thought of vv. 2-4. The sub-paragraph should end after v. 11, not before it, as in WH.'s text.

ἀνὴρ A<sup>9</sup> minn read ἄνθρωπος, probably an emendation in order not to exclude women.

This form of praising a virtue is very common in the O. T., especially in Psalms and Ecclesiasticus, for Hebrew שְׂמֵחַ יֵשׁוּעַ. ἀνὴρ is naturally preferred to ἄνθρωπος in most cases. The article is omitted by LXX in most of the instances, probably because the statement is thought of as of general application ("blessed is any man who," etc.). Cf. Ps. 1<sup>1</sup> 84<sup>1</sup>, Prov. 8<sup>11</sup>, Eccclus. 14<sup>1</sup> 26<sup>1</sup>, Is. 56<sup>1</sup>, Job 5<sup>17</sup> μακάριος δὲ ἄνθρωπος ὃν ἡλεῖξεν ὁ κύριος, 4 Macc. 7<sup>11</sup> διὰ τὴν ἀρετὴν πάντα πόνον ὑπομένειν μακάριόν ἐστιν, etc., Dan. 12<sup>12</sup> (Theod.) μακάριος ὁ ὑπομένων.

Both in form and substance this verse in James is characteristically Jewish and Biblical. On the interesting difference from the abundant and familiar Greek and Latin congratulatory expressions, see E. Norden, Agnostos Theos, 1913, pp. 100 f.; G. L. Dirichlet, De veterum macarismis (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, xiv), 1914.

ὑπομένει, "endureth"; i. e. "shows constancy under"; cf. Zech. 6<sup>14</sup> LXX ὁ δὲ στέφανος ἔσται τοῖς ὑπομένουσιν. The word may also be taken as future, ὑπομενεῖ.

πειρασμόν, "trial," as in v. 2. Inner enticement to evil would have to be resisted, not endured.

From the Greeks the Jews became familiar with the custom of giving a wreath as a prize to victors in games. This was an important, but incidental, result of the general employment of chaplets (στέφανοι) as ornaments and badges of honour.

ἡμέρῃ, cf. 1 Cor. 9<sup>11</sup>) and of an honourable ornament, or badge of dignity (Phil. 4<sup>1</sup>, 1 Thess. 2<sup>10</sup> τίς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἐλπίς ἢ χαρὰ ἢ στέφανος καυχήσεως, Rev. 3<sup>11</sup>).

This last sense, of a figurative "honourable ornament," seems to be the meaning in 1 Pet. 5<sup>4</sup> καὶ φανερωθέντος τοῦ ἀρχιποῦ-μενος κομμείσθε τὸν ἀμαράντινον τῆς δόξης στέφανον (where lurks an implied contrast with a wreath of leaves), in Rev. 2<sup>10</sup> δώσω σοι τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς, and in the passage of James under discussion. There is no reason whatever for thinking of a royal crown, and no need of introducing any reference to the use of wreaths as prizes in the Greek games. That metaphor, which implies competition and so exclusion, is not an adequate one as the basis of the N. T. use (cf. 2 Clem. Rom. 7, where this very difficulty is felt), and crowns were in fact acquired in other ways as well as by contending in the games. The idea is rather of a mark of honour to be given by the Great King to his friends.
An excellent case of this figurative use is Ep. Arist. 280 καθὼς σὺ τοῦτο ἐπιτελεῖς, εἶπε, μέγιστε βασιλεῦ, θεοῦ σοι στέφανον δικαιοσύνης δεδωκότος. Righteousness here constitutes the crown, and it is a gift, not a prize.

The metaphor of the crown for the blessed reward of the pious was evidently already familiar before the N. T. authors wrote. This is shown not only by Test. XII Patr. Benj. 4<sup>1</sup> already quoted, but also by the form of the several N. T. passages. Note the use of the definite article, the variation in the added genitive, and the acquaintance with the idea implied in ἡμεῖς δὲ ἀφθαρτον, 1 Cor. 9<sup>24</sup>. It may even be that στέφανος, like στεφανῶ, had already gained the simple meaning "re-

τῆς ζωῆς, expegetical genitive, as 1 Pet. 5<sup>4</sup>, Ep. Arist. 280.
The blessed life of eternity constitutes the crown. Cf. Rev. 2<sup>10</sup>. ἐπηγγέλατο sc. ὁ θεός, cf. 1 Jn. 5<sup>16</sup>. There is no promise of the O. T. or of our Lord in just this form (cf. Deut. 30<sup>15-20</sup>), and a reference to Rev. 2<sup>10</sup> δώσω σοι τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς is unlikely. Eternal life as the reward for the friends of God was a fundamental idea of later Jewish and of Christian escha-

E. Zeller, however, argues in Zeit. f. wissenschaft. Theol. 1863, pp. 93-96, that Rev. 2<sup>10</sup> is the promise referred to.

Note the resemblance to 2 Tim. 4<sup>8</sup>. Von Soden suggests dependence on some liturgical form, but this is unnecessary. The idea and phrase are strongly characteristic of Deuteronomy. Cf. Ex. 20<sup>6</sup>, καὶ ποιῶν ἔλεος εἰς χιλιάδας τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν με, Deut. 7<sup>9</sup> τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν, Ps. 5<sup>11</sup> 145<sup>20</sup>, Eccclus. 31<sup>18</sup>, Bel v. <sup>2</sup>, Rom. 8<sup>28</sup>. See passages from O. T. and other Jewish literature mentioned in Spitta, p. 30. Cf. the similar expression in Jas. 2<sup>5</sup> τῆς βασιλείας ἧς ἐπηγγέλματο τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν. The believer's life is marked by constancy in faith and by love of God, and he may be designated by either attribute.

13-18. When under temptation, do not excuse yourself by saying that temptations proceed from God. They come from man's evil passion. God sends only good gifts to us, for we are his children and the first-fruits of his creation.

The passage has no doctrinal purpose other than to warn the readers against resorting to a current excuse for sin. The connection with the preceding is made by the aid of the ambiguity of the word πειραζόμενος, which means both "tried" and "tempted." The temptations intended do not appear to be restricted to those involved in "trials."

πειραζόμενος. Evidently means (cf. vv. 14<sup>1</sup>.) temptation to sin, not merely external trial. See on πειρασμοῖς, v. <sup>2</sup>, and cf. 1 Tim. 6<sup>9</sup> εἰς πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα. The excuse shows that the writer is not thinking of a state of religious persecution, with the consequent temptation to complete renunciation of faith in Christ or in God, but rather of ordinary temptation. In the case supposed the person tempted either has yielded, or is on the point of yielding; he is called ὁ πειραζόμενος, instead of ὁ ἀμαρτῶν, by a kind of euphemism. He excuses himself by declaring that the temptation came from God. Paul in 1 Cor. 10<sup>13</sup> makes a similar exhortation in curiously different form: "Do not excuse yourselves by thinking that your temptation is greater than man can bear."

Warning against this natural and common impulse of frail humanity is found clearly expressed in Ecclus. 15<sup>11-20</sup>, μὴ εἴπῃς ὅτι διὰ κύριον ἀπέστην κτλ.; cf. also the references to Philo given below.

Prov. 19<sup>1</sup> ἀφροσύνη ἀνδρὸς λυμáινεται τὰς ὁδοὺς αὐτοῦ, τὸν δὲ θεὸν αἰτιάται τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ, Hermas, Sim. vi, 3 αἰτιῶνται τὸν κύριον, and similar passages, relate to complaints of misfortune, not to excuses for sin.

That the idea was often expressed among Greeks of many periods is seen from the following instances:

Homer, Odys. i, 32-34 (Zeus speaks), ὦ πόποι, ὅλον δὴ νῦ θεοὺς βροτοὶ αἰτιῶνται.

ἐξ ἡμέων γάρ φασι κἀκ' ἔμμεναι· οἱ δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ σφῆσιν ἀτασθαλίῃσιν ὑπέρμορον ἄλγε' ἔχουσιν.
Il. xix, 86-87, ἐγὼ δ' οὐκ αἰτιός εἰμι, ἀλλὰ Ζεὺς καὶ μοῖρα καὶ ἡροφροῖτις ἑρινός.

Euripides, Tro des, 914-1032, Orest. 285, Phæn. 1612-14.

Æschines, Timarch. i, 190, μὴ γὰρ οἴεσθε, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, τὰς τῶν ἀδικημάτων ἀρχὰς ἀπὸ θεῶν, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων ἀσελγείας γίνεσθαι.

Plato, Respub. 10, p. 617 E, αἰτία ἐλομένου· θεὸς ἀναίτιος, exactly expresses the idea, but seems irrelevant, because in the context the choice referred to is made by a pre-existent soul of a future condition of life; cf. also p. 619 C.

Philo, Leg. alleg. ii, 19, Mang. p. 80, "When the mind has sinned and removed itself far from virtue, it lays the blame on divine causes (τὰ θεῖα), attributing to God its own change (τροπή)"; De fuga et ino. (De prof.), 15, Mang. pp. 557 f.: "Of no secret, treacherous, and deliberate crime is it proper to say that it was done by the will of God (κατὰ θεόν), but they are done by our own will (καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτούς). For in ourselves, as I have said, are the treasures of evil, but with God the treasures of good things only. Whoever, therefore, 'flees for refuge,' that is, whoever blames not himself but God for his sins, let him be punished. . . . A blemish almost or quite incurable is the affirmation that the deity is the cause of evil. . . . And what slander could be worse than to say that not with us but with God lies the origin of evil?" Cf. also Philo, Quod deter. pot. insid. 32.

Terence, Eun. v, 2. 36, quid si hoc quispiam voluit deus?

See L. Schmidt, Die Ethik der alten Griechen, 1882, i, pp. 230-240.

The fact that this idea was so familiar helps to account for the attachment of vv. 12-13 to a passage (vv. 1-12) which deals with another sort of πειρασμός. The substance of the passage is not original; the freshness consists in the way in which the thought is worked out.

The suggestion of Pfeleiderer (Das Urchristentum<sup>1</sup>, ii, p. 546) that this is polemic against the gnostics has as little foundation as the older references to Essenes, Pharisees, or Simon Magus. The quotations given above prove this. It would be easier (and not unnatural) to think of a Greek popular habit of thought and speech which had affected a Jewish community. The idea of being "tempted," which is the root of the whole passage, also shows that the self-excusing sinner whom James has in mind is no gnostic.

ἀπό. The preposition ἀπό, which expresses a "looser and more remote" relation of agency is perhaps used here out of reverence. Cf. Lex. s. v. p. 59<sup>b</sup>, Lightfoot on Gal. 1<sup>1</sup>; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 102, 237.

ἀπειραστος (class. ἀπείρητος, ἀπείρατος) can mean, when used of a person, (1) "untempted," "untemptable," or (2) "unversed," "having no experience."

In favour of the meaning "untemptable" (E.V.) is the sharp verbal contrast then afforded to πειράζει οὐδένα.

κακῶν. On this good literary use of the genitive, see Winer, § 30. 4; Blass, § 36. 11; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 74 ("the poetical phraseology of the Attic period had come down into the market-place").

14-15. The source of temptation is within the man; the process is from passion, through sin, to death.

It is highly significant that James's mind naturally turns for the true explanation of temptation not to the Jewish thought of Satan (cf. the explanation of the origin of sin in the Book of Enoch 69<sup>4a</sup>), or of the "evil root," but to a psychological analysis, strongly influenced by Greek conceptions of human nature.

14. ὑπὸ τῆς ἰδίας ἐπιθυμίας. Belongs primarily with πειράζεται, for otherwise the contrast of θεός and ἐπιθυμία is weakened; but it is, secondarily, the agent of the participles also.

ἐπιθυμία, a word in itself applicable to any desire, whether innocent or wrong, is here used of desire for something forbidden, "lust" (E.V.) in the broader sense of that word. The source of temptation is desire, and lies within, not without, the man. There is no emphasis here, as in Ecclus. 15<sup>14-20</sup>, on free will; on the other hand, any conception of an outside, personified, Power, such as Paul employs in Rom. 7<sup>8, 10, 13, 17</sup>, is foreign to this passage. The conception is far simpler and more naïve than either of these.

Ecclus. 18<sup>20</sup> f. 5<sup>1</sup>, 4 Macc. 1<sup>22</sup> πρὸ μὲν οὖν τῆς ἡδονῆς ἐστὶν ἐπιθυμία· μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἡδονὴν χαρά, 4 Macc. 1<sup>21</sup>. 11 2<sup>1</sup>. 4. 6 3<sup>2</sup>. 11. 11 5<sup>22</sup>. In these passages the word is used with various shades of meaning. Cf. Philo, Quod omn. prob. liber, 22 εἰ μὲν γὰρ [ἡ ψυχὴ] πρὸς ἐπιθυμίας ἐλαύνεται ἢ ὅφ' ἡδονῆς δελεάζεται. On the significance of ἐπιθυμία in Philo's system, see J. Drummond, Philo Judæus, 1888, ii, pp. 302-306, and note especially De concup. 1 f., M. pp. 348-350; De sacerdot. honor. 3, M. p. 235, where ἐπιθυμία is vividly set forth as the source of sin. The background of James's use is current popularised conceptions of Hellenistic philosophy. The Stoic discussion of the word in Stobæus, ii, 7 (Wachsmuth's ed. pp. 87-91) is instructive in this respect. See also on Jas. 4<sup>1</sup> f.

There seems no sufficient reason for introducing the thought of the yecer ha-ra here, although the function is closely similar. See F. C. Porter, "The Yeçer Hara," in Yale Biblical and Semitic Studies, 1902, pp. 91-158.

These words were applied to the hunter or, especially, the fisherman, who "lures" his prey from its retreat (ἐξέλκειν) and "entices" it (δελεάζειν) by bait (δέλεαρ) to his trap, hook, or net. The two words thus merely refer to different aspects of the same process. They are a natural figure of speech for the solicitation of illicit desire, and the combination of one or both with ἐπιθυμία or ἡδονή is repeatedly found in Philo and in Greek writers. Cf. the sentence from Philo quoted above and the many illustrative passages given by Mayor and Hort; also 2 Pet. 2<sup>14</sup>. 19.

The language thus has its analogies outside of the O. T., in Greek writers. This figure is not necessarily connected with that which is worked out in v. 14; and there is no evidence that the words ἐξελαζόμενος and δελεαζόμενος suggested in themselves the practises of the harlot, or that these are in mind in either verse.

15. Illicit desire leads to sin, and sin causes death.

εἴτα introduces, with a change of figure, the practical result of the temptation arising from ἐπιθυμία. When indulged (cf. 4 Macc. 3<sup>1-5</sup>) desire bears its natural fruit, first sin, then, ultimately, death. This follows (εἴτα) the enticement of temptation.

Cf. Gen. 21<sup>8</sup> 38<sup>8</sup>, etc. The two ideas have no independent significance in the figure. That the issue is due to a union with the will (Beyschlag) is not indicated as in the writer's thought. Such psychological analysis is found in Philo, but is beyond the range of James; and the idea, when developed carefully, proves inconsistent with this context, see Spitta, p. 37. There is no reason for thinking of Adam and Eve, in spite of Justin Martyr, Dial. p. 327 (other references in Schneckenburger and Spitta); nor of the devil as father (Spitta). But the quotations from Philo and Test. XII Patr. (e. g. Benj. 7) given by Spitta, ad loc., attest the frequent use of this figure to express similar ideas.

ἁμαρτίαν. "Sin," collectively and in general; "pravæ actiones et cogitationes." Desire for what is forbidden tempts the man, and thus is the source of sin. Cf. Apoc. Mos. 19 ἐπιθυμία γὰρ ἐστὶν κεφαλὴ πάσης ἁμαρτίας.

ἡ δὲ ἁμαρτία. Takes up ἁμαρτίαν; hence the article.

ἀποτελεσθεῖσα, "when it has become complete, fully developed," "has come to maturity." The word (on which see Hort) is drawn from the figure of the successive generations, and it is not necessary to determine wherein in fact the complete maturity of sin consists; sin is "complete" when it is able to bring forth its inevitable baneful fruit, death. The "perfect work" (cf. v. 4) of sin is death.

θάνατον. Death as an objective state, brought upon man as the result of sin, and the opposite of blessed life with God (cf. v. 12 στέφανον ζωῆς, and 5<sup>20</sup>) and cf. Rom. 6<sup>21 f.</sup> 6<sup>23</sup> τὰ γὰρ ὀφώνια τῆς ἀμαρτίας θάνατος, 8<sup>6</sup>; Wisd. 1<sup>13 f.</sup>. Cf. Philo, De plant. Noe 9, M. p. 335. See also Mt. 7<sup>13, 14</sup>.

16-18. God, on the other hand, sends solely and consistently good gifts, as befits the relation of a father to his first-born.

16. μὴ πλανᾷσθε. "Do not err," "be not deceived." As in 1 Cor. 6<sup>9</sup> 15<sup>33</sup>, Gal. 6<sup>7</sup>, used to introduce a pointed utterance. Cf. Ign. Phil. 3, Eph. 16, which may, however, be dependent on 1 Cor. 6<sup>9</sup>.

17. πᾶσα, "every."

Various commentators assign to πᾶσα here the meaning "only," "nothing but" (see note on πᾶσαν χαρὰν, v. 2). But this is not necessary to the sense here, and is rendered almost, if not quite, impossible by the order of words πᾶσα δόσις ἀγαθή. πᾶς with the sense of "only" (Ger. laute) should stand next to the adjective to which it logically belongs, and usually stands directly before it.

ἀγαθή. On this word lies strong emphasis, in contrast to the evil πειρασμός which ἡ ἰδία ἐπιθυμία and not God brings to man. The omission of the writer to make the implied complementary statement, that bad gifts do not come from God, adds to the rhetorical effect.

δῶρημα, "present," "donation," "benefaction"; cf. Rom. 5<sup>16</sup>. A mainly poetical word. Not quite happily rendered by R.V. "boon."

For the difference between δίδωμι and δωρίομαι with their cognates, see Mayor's and Hort's notes, together with the huge collection of material in Heisen, pp. 541-592. The latter series of words often has the idea of generous giving; but here in James there is no special distinction intended, the repetition being solely for rhetorical effect, and very probably part of a poetical allusion or quotation.

τέλειον, cf. 1<sup>4</sup>. 2<sup>5</sup> 3<sup>2</sup>. "Perfect" in this case (note parallel to ἀγαθή) excludes any element of evil in the gift. Cf. 3<sup>2</sup> τέλειος ἀνὴρ, Clem. Al. Pæd. i, 6, p. 113 τέλειος ὢν τέλεια χαριεῖται δήπουθεν, Philo, De sacr. Abel. et Cain. 14 θέμις δὲ οὐδὲν ἀτελὲς αὐτῷ χαρίζεσθαι, ὥσθ' ὁλόκληροι καὶ παντελεῖς αἱ τοῦ ἀγενήτου δωρεαὶ πᾶσαι.

That πᾶσά δὲ | σὶς ἄγᾶ | θή καὶ | πᾶν δῶ | ρήμᾶ τῷ | λείδων makes an hexameter, the second syllable of δόσις being lengthened under the ictus, may be an accident, although even so it might show a good ear for rhythm on the part of the writer. But the unusual and poetical word δῶρημα and the imperfect antithesis to vv. 12-15 make it more likely that we have here a quotation from an unknown source.

So Philo, De somn. i, 26 διὰ τὰς ὁμβρηθείσας ἄνωθεν δωρεὰς ἀγαθὸς καὶ τέλειος ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐγένετο [sc. ὁ Ἰσαάκ].

The thought that God is the source only of good, here clearly expressed, is found in Greek writers (see quotations in Mayor<sup>3</sup>, pp. 56f., and Schneckenburger, p. 30), as well as in Philo, e. g. De decem orac. 33 θεὸς ἦν, εὐθὺς δὲ κύριος ἀγαθός, μόνων ἀγαθῶν αἴτιος, κακοῦ δ' οὐδενός, De prof. 15, De confus. ling. 36 (see other quotations in Mayor and Schneckenburger).

It was evidently a familiar commonplace of Jewish thought, cf. Tob. 4<sup>19</sup> αὐτὸς ὁ κύριος δίδωσι πάντα τὰ ἀγαθὰ, also Beresh. i. 51. 5 dixit R. Chanina: non est res mala descendens desuper; Sanhedrin 59. 2.

καταβαῖνον expands ἄνωθεν, and so explains why the gifts are "good" and "perfect." For similar phrases lagging after the first statement, cf. v. 14 3<sup>8</sup> 4<sup>12</sup>. This gives better force to each word than to connect ἐστίν with καταβαῖνον.

Hort (following Thos. Erskine, The Unconditional Freedom of the Gospel<sup>1</sup>, 1820, pp. 239 ff.) advocates the translation: "Every giving is good and every gift perfect from above (or from its first source), descending," etc. This assumes that δόσις and δῶρημα contain in themselves the idea of a divine gift, and in order to make ἄνωθεν fit the sentence requires for it the meaning "from their source," "by reason of their origin," which it can hardly have. It produces, however, the sense required by the context, and if the words were to be regarded as forming a complete sentence, it would be hard to give them any other translation than this. If they are a quotation, the original application would probably have been in the direction of the Greek proverb δῶρον δ' ὃ τι δῶ τις ἐπαίνει and the Latin noli equi dentes inspicere donati (Jerome, Praef. comm. in Ephes.), "Don't look a gift horse in the mouth"; see H. Fischer, in Philologus, 1891, pp. 377-379.

ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς τῶν φώτων, i. e. God, here described as the creator of the heavenly bodies (cf. Ps. 136<sup>1</sup> τῷ ποιήσαντι φῶτα μεγάλα μόνη, Jer. 4<sup>22</sup> ἐπέβλεψα . . . εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, καὶ οὐκ ἦν τὰ φῶτα αὐτοῦ), and thus as the ultimate source of all light and of all blessing, cf. Ps. 36<sup>9</sup> ἐν τῷ φωτὶ σου ὠφράμεθα φῶς.

This designation and the developed figure which follows, in which God as the Sun of Righteousness (cf. Mal. 4<sup>2</sup>) is contrasted with the physical sun, seem to be suggested by the thought of the good gifts which descend from the heavens, at once the abode of God and the location of the sun. That it was natural to a Jew is shown by the benediction before Shema: "Blessed be the Lord our God who hath formed the lights." Perhaps it hints at the thought of God's nature as light. No astrological allusion is to be found here.

δλων in sense of "the Creator." Cf. Apocalypse of Moses, 36 (as read in Ceriani, Monumenta sacra et profana, v, 1) ἐνώπιον τοῦ φωτός τῶν δλων, τοῦ πατρὸς τῶν φώτων; Testament of Abraham (ed. M. R. James, 1892), Recension B, c. 7, πατὴρ τοῦ φωτός; Ephraem Syr. Opera, v, col. 489 (see above, p. 96).

Philo's lofty thought of God as "archetypal Splendor" is mainly interesting here as showing the total absence from the mind of James of such metaphysical speculation, although he sees the ideal and poetical aspects of light. See Philo, De cherub. 28 (M. i, p. 156), De somn. i, 13 (M. i, p. 632), quoted by Hort.

The affirmation is that to send good gifts belongs to God's unvarying nature. In this he is unlike the sun, which sends now the full light of noon, now the dimness of twilight, and which at night sends no light at all. God's light ever shines; from him proceeds no turning shadow. So 1 Jn. 1<sup>5</sup> ὁ θεὸς φῶς ἐστὶν καὶ σκοτία οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν αὐτῷ οὐδεμία.

Closely similar are Is. 60<sup>19</sup>. καὶ οὐκ ἔσται σοι ἔτι ὁ ἥλιος εἰς φῶς ἡμέρας, οὐδὲ ἀνατολὴ σελήνης φωτιεῖ σοι τὴν νύκτα, ἀλλ' ἔσται σοι κύριος φῶς αἰώνιον, καὶ ὁ θεὸς δόξα σου. οὐ γὰρ δύσεται ὁ ἥλιός σοι, καὶ ἡ σελήνη σοι οὐκ ἐκλείψει· ἔσται γὰρ κύριός σοι φῶς αἰώνιον, Wisd. 7<sup>29</sup> ὁ φωτὶ συντρινομένη εὐρίσκεται προτέρα· τοῦτο μὲν γὰρ διαδέχεται νύξ, σοφίας δὲ οὐκ ἀντισχέει κακία.

For the contrast between God and the heavens, the moon, and the stars, cf. Job 15<sup>15</sup> 25<sup>1</sup> ὁ. See also Enoch 41<sup>5</sup>, "For the sun changes oft for a blessing or a curse"; Ecclus. 17<sup>21</sup> τί φωτεινότερον ἡλίου; καὶ τοῦτο ἐκλείπει. Cf. Epictetus, Diss. i, 14<sup>10</sup>, where the limitation of the sun, which is not able to illuminate the space where the shadow of the earth falls, is contrasted with the power of God (ὁ καὶ τὸν ἥλιον αὐτὸν πεποιτώς καὶ περιέγων).

The comparison of God with the sun is a natural one under any monotheistic conception. See Mayor's or Schneckenburger's references to Philo and Plato, also 1 Jn. 1<sup>5</sup> with Westcott's note.

οὐκ ἔνι] N<sup>p</sup> minn have substituted the weaker and more familiar οὐκ ἔστιν.

παράλλαγή, "variation." This does not seem to be an astronomical terminus technicus, although in general senses (e. g. of the "variation" in the length of the day and in the daily course of the sun through the heavens; cf. references in Mayor<sup>2</sup>, p. 60, and Gebser, Brief des Jacobus, p. 83) it is used by astronomers, and its resemblance to the term παράλλαξις, "parallax," gives it a quasi-astronomical sound. The contrast intended is mainly with the sun and moon, as being the most important and most changeable φῶτα.

This is the reading of all printed editions of the N. T.; with this reading τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα would mean "shadow that is cast by turning" (R.V.). The reading is, however, probably wrong (see textual note below), and for the last three words should be substituted ἢ τροπῆς ἀποσκιώματος, the whole phrase meaning: "with whom is none of the variation that belongs to ('consists in,' 'is observed in') the turning of the shadow." The general sense is the same as with the usual reading.

ἀποσκίασμα ἢ παραλλαγή ἢ τροπή sah.

Editors appear all to have read ἢ (instead of ἡ), and have consequently been unable to find any meaning in the phrase as found in N<sup>o</sup>B and recently (1914) confirmed by the discovery of the papyrus fragment (fourth century) published in The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, x, no. 1229. They have, therefore, been driven to adopt the reading of N<sup>o</sup>ACKLP minn. Hort discusses the passage in "Introduction," pp. 217 f., as follows:

"The only quite trustworthy evidence from internal character for derivation from a common proximate original consists in the presence of such erroneous identical readings as are evidently due to mere carelessness or caprice of individual scribes, and could not easily have escaped correction in passing through two or three transcriptions . . . N and B have in common but one such reading" [vis. the one in Jas. 1" here under discussion].

In order to account for the origin of this reading of NB, which he assumed to be obviously false, Hort made the following ingenious suggestions: (1) that ἀποσπασμα was incorporated with a following *αὐτό*ς (actually found in one minuscule); or (2) that it was assimilated to the preceding genitive τροπῆς; or (3) that ἀπο- became mentally separated from -σπασμα, and that the supposed solecism was then corrected; or (4) that both the competing readings represent corruptions of an original ἀποσπασμάς not found in any Ms. (see "Introduction," p. 218, and Mayor, textual apparatus to the passage).

Wordsworth, SB, i, p. 138, in part following Est, Commentarius in epistolam Jacobi, 1631, thinks that the modicum of ff and the momenti of Augustine imply βοπή, βοπῆς, "turn of the scale," and that one or the other of these represents the original Greek. But neither βοπή nor βοπῆς makes good sense, and although (cf. Is. 40<sup>11</sup>) a "little thing" may cause a "turn of the scale," the Latin word modicum is not a natural translation for the Greek βοπή. Hence modicum obumbrationis is probably only a loose and general translation of τροπῆ ἀποσπασματος, in which the specific meaning of τροπῆ is neglected. On the other hand, momenti would indeed be an exact rendering of βοπῆς, but, in the sense of "movement," it is equally apt as a translation of τροπῆς.* Accordingly, the Latin versions merely show that Jerome and Augustine had the reading of N<sup>o</sup>AC, while ff represents a different text, identical with that of 614 1108 boh.

The genitive ἀποσπασματος in 614 1108 ff boh gives important partial support to the text of BN* pap, and makes it unlikely that the reading of these latter is due to an accidental error in a proximate common ancestor.

In fact, the reading of BN* pap η τροπῆς ἀποσπασματος makes excellent sense, if only η is taken as the article on which τροπῆς depends, the meaning being that given above (cf. Kühner-Gerth, Grammatik d. griech. Sprache<sup>1</sup>, ii, § 464. 3). The resulting phrase is apt and not without beauty, but the accumulation of long words makes it heavy, and it was broken up by taking η as meaning "or" and dropping the genitive termination from one or the other of the two nouns.†

* Possibly modicum has been substituted for an original translation, momentum, "movement." This latter word may well have been misunderstood in the sense of "a little," "a particle"; and in that case modicum would be a correct and unambiguous synonym.

† A similar misreading is found in the repeated quotation by Augustine of Rom. 7<sup>11</sup> ἀμαρτωλὸς ἢ ἀμαρτία in the translation aut peccatum; so e. g. Ep. 82, § 20 (Vienna ed. vol. xxxiv, p. 372. 5), Contra duas epistulas Pelagianorum, i, 14. See C. H. Turner in JTS, xii, p. 275.

It thus appears that the textual facts here do not indicate any close relation between B and  $\aleph$ , but only that in this instance both are free from a process of emendation which, in one or the other direction, has affected all other witnesses except the papyrus. The reading of  $\aleph^a$  AC and that of 614 1108 are two independent corrections of the original as found in B $\aleph^*$  pap.

Both 614 and 1108 belong to von Soden's group I $^a$ . To the same group seems to belong also 876 ( $\beta^{ac}$ ), which, according to Scrivener, reads παραλλαγή ἢ τροπή ἢ τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα. This is a conflation due to an unsuccessful attempt at conformation of one type of text to another; it is also found in 1518.

876, 1518, 1765, and 2138 have at the close of the verse a gloss οὐδὲ μέχρι ὑπονομίας τινὸς ὑποβολή ἀποσκιάματος, "not even the least suspicion of a shadow." Von Soden's hypothesis (p. 1862) that the reading of B $\aleph^*$  was a trace of this gloss was unlikely in itself and is now seen to be unnecessary. The gloss itself has arisen from the comment of "Eccumenius": τὸ δὲ "τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα," ἀντὶ τοῦ, οὐδὲ μέχρις ὑπονομίας τινὸς ὑποβολή.

τροπή, "turning," "change," is another semi-astronomical word. It is used technically for the solstice (hence English, "tropic"), so Deut. 33<sup>14</sup> ἡλίου τροπῶν, Wisd. 7<sup>18</sup> τροπῶν ἀλλαγάς, see Sophocles, Greek Lex. s. v. for many examples; but it is also applied to other movements of the heavenly bodies, so perhaps Job 38<sup>31</sup> ἐπίστασαι δὲ τροπὰς οὐρανοῦ, cf. references in L. and S. s. v., especially Plato, Tim. 11, p. 39 D.

The word is also used in the sense of change in general, and with reference to human fickleness and frailty; see Philo, Leg. all. ii, 9; De sacr. Abel. et Cain. 37, and references given at length by Mayor<sup>3</sup>, p. 61. These various meanings make possible the figurative use here, in which there is allusion to both senses. To exclude altogether the astronomical allusion, as some do, unduly weakens the passage and overlooks the suggestions of ὁ πατὴρ τῶν φῶτων, παραλλαγή, and ἀποσκίασμα, but it is impossible to fix the meaning as a direct reference to any particular celestial phenomena, and there is nowhere any indication of contact with astrological language. The heavenly bodies are all, to popular notion, subject to change which affects their property of casting light on the earth.

Spitta thinks that τροπή refers to the return of the sun (and other luminaries) by way of the north to their place of rising in the east, after they have set in the west, and adduces Enoch 41<sup>1</sup> and 72<sup>1-4</sup>. The general sense need not exclude these movements of the sun and other heavenly bodies, but there is no evidence of a technical use of τροπή which would permit it to be understood in this sense without explanatory context. The same is true in even greater measure of Spitta's interpretation of παραλλαγή as the regular seasonal variation to north and south in the rising and setting of the sun and other bodies.

The word is found only here and in Christian writers. ἀποσκιάζω means to "cast a shadow," ἀποσκίασμα therefore (like σκίασμα, Diod. Plut.) is either the "shadow cast" or the "act of casting a shadow."

Beyschlag, following Huther, wrongly insists that ἀποσκίασμα means "the state of being overshadowed" ("das Beschattetwerden"), and so interprets it of a shadow cast on God. For discussion of nouns in -μα, see Lightfoot, Colossians, pp. 255 ff.; J. A. Robinson, Ephesians, pp. 255 ff.

There is no thought here of a sun-dial. The word for shadow on a dial is ἀποσκιασμός, and even that word requires a context to define it in that meaning.

The explanation (of the ordinary text) given by late Greek commentators and lexicographers, "not a trace of turning," "not a shadow of fickleness" ("Œcumenius," Hesychius, Suidas, see the citations in Gebser, p. 86), and A.V. "neither shadow of turning," is unlikely, even if the text were sound, because in that sense σκιά, and not the heavy and explicit compound ἀποσκίασμα, would be expected. The difference may be imperfectly suggested in English by comparing the words "shadow" and "shadowing." Moreover, in a comparison with the sun, ἀποσκίασμα can hardly have been used without some thought of its proper meaning.

18. In contrast with the mistaken idea that God sends temptation is his actual treatment of us, making us sons, and giving us the highest place among his creatures. He is more to us than a consistent benefactor; he is a devoted father, and as such cannot tempt us to evil.

βουληθεῖς, "deliberately," and thus showing his real attitude and set purpose. On the specific meaning of βούλομαι ("volition guided by choice and purpose") in contrast to θέλω, see Hort on this verse, and Lex. s. v. θέλω, with references.

Bede, Calvin, Grotius, etc. take this as marking a contrast to human merit; but this is as far as possible from the context.

ἀπεκύησεν ἡμᾶς, refers either to mankind or to the Christians.

A specific reference to the Jews is sometimes found here, and can be supported by Jer. 23, by Philo, De const. princ. 6 (ii, p. 366), where Israel is called ἀπαρχή, and by λόγον (but v. l. λόγους) ἀληθείας as a description of the Law in Test. XII Patr. Gen. 31. But nothing in the context suggests this reference, and for the idea of God as becoming the father of Israel by means of the Law no parallel is adduced.

The reference to Christians is entirely possible and makes a better connection with v. 19. In that case ἀπεκύησεν refers to the new birth; λόγος ἀληθείας is the Gospel (cf. Odes of Solomon 89); and κτισμάτων refers to all creation, but with particular thought of men. The associations of ἀναγέννησις with Greek religious ideas do not seem to be implied here.

If ἡμᾶς is taken to refer to Christians, it must be understood of believers in general, not of the first generation only (Huther) or of Jewish Christians (Beyschlag).

The objections brought against this view are (1) that the context (vv. 12-17) has discussed the subject from general points of view, with no reference to Christians as distinct from others; (2) that for the Gospel ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀληθείας, with the article, would be expected (cf. Eph. 113, Col. 15, 2 Tim. 218; note, in a different sense, λόγος ἀληθείας, Ps. 11948, 2 Cor. 67); (3) that instead of κτισμάτων some word expressly denoting "men" would have been expected. These objections do not seem conclusive.

The other view, urged by Spitta and especially Hort, takes ἡμᾶς of mankind, begotten by God's word to be supreme among created things, cf. Eccclus. 1514. The objection which seems decisive against this is that the figure of begetting was not used for creation (Gen. 126 does not cover this), whereas it came early into use with reference to the Christians, who deemed themselves "sons of God."

The idea of a divine begetting and of the entrance into Christian life as a new birth has its roots in Greek not in Jewish thought. So Clem. Alex. Strom. v, 2 (p. 653 Potter) καὶ παρὰ τοῖς βαρβάροις φιλοσόφοις τὸ

λόγῳ ἀληθείας. The knowledge of God's truth and will makes us his sons (cf. vv. 21, 22, 23); the "word of truth" is for James mainly the Law (v. 25), which means the Jewish law as understood by Christians. In 2 Cor. 6<sup>7</sup>, Col. 1<sup>5</sup>, Eph. 1<sup>13</sup>, and perhaps 2 Tim. 2<sup>15</sup> it is the gospel of salvation.

There is no connection between this verse and Philo's figure, often repeated in one and another form, of the generative word of God (cf. Leg. alleg. iii, 51, ὁ σπερματικὸς καὶ γεννητικὸς τῶν καλῶν λόγος ὁρθός, and references in Spitta, pp. 45 f.); the idea is utterly different.

ἀπαρχήν τινα, "a kind of first-fruits"; τινα indicates a figurative expression, cf. Winer-Schm. § 26. 1. a.

The "first-fruits," both of the body and of the field, were sacred, and were often offered to God. See EB, "Firstborn," HDB, "First-fruits," Schürer, GJV, § 24, II.

The figure is found with reference to Israel in Jer. 2<sup>a</sup> (ἀρχὴ γεννημάτων αὐτοῦ), Philo, De const. princ. 6 (βίβητι τοῦ σύμπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους ἀπνευμήθη ὅλα τις ἀπαρχὴ τῷ ποιητῇ καὶ πατρὶ), and to the Christians in 2 Thess. 2<sup>13</sup> (Codd. BFG, etc.) and Rev. 14<sup>4</sup>. But the figure does not seem very common in Jewish thought. With Greek writers the word is more frequent in a figurative sense, see L. and S. and the Scholiast on Eur. Or. 96 quoted in Lex. s. v., which says that ἀπαρχή "was used not merely of that which was first in order but of that which was first in honor."

κτισμάτων, cf. 1 Tim. 4<sup>a</sup> (Rev. 5<sup>13</sup> 8<sup>9</sup>); not used elsewhere in N. T., cf. Wisd. 13<sup>5</sup>. In O. T. found only in Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, 3 Maccabees; not used in this sense in secular writers, and to be associated with the Jewish use of κτίζω and its derivatives.

Von Soden, misled by his failure to see any adequate connection of thought for v. 18, wished to take κτισμάτων of God's new creation (cf. 2 Cor. 5<sup>17</sup> καὶνὴ κτίσις, Gal. 6<sup>15</sup>, Eph. 2<sup>10</sup> 4<sup>24</sup>), within which these particular Christians addressed are distinguished by reason of their subjection to fiery trials. But (1) this does not suit ἀπεκύρωσεν, which must at least refer to all Christians; (2) it would require some clearer indication of the restriction, since the idea is not a common one; and (3) while suited to vv. 2-11, it is inappropriate at this point in the chapter.

The thought here turns to the need of reality and sincerity in religious instruction and public worship (1<sup>12</sup>-2<sup>26</sup>).

The Antiochian reading (ᾧστε . . . ἴτω) is a characteristic emendation.

ἴστε, "know this." The address ἀδελφοί μου shows that this belongs in the paragraph with the following. The sense alone would perhaps suggest that ἴστε is probably indicative (so R.V.), not imperative (A.V.); but the analogy of ὁράτε, μέμνησο, and similar rhetorical appeals in the Greek diatribes (Bultmann, Stil der paulin. Predigt, p. 32) leads to the opposite conclusion.

For this view it may also be urged that Jas. 4* has οἴδατε as the indicative. ἴστε is the sole form of the imperative, and the more literary form of the indicative. Note ἴσασι in Acts 26<sup>4</sup>; Heb. 12<sup>17</sup> has ἴστε (probably indicative), 10<sup>26</sup> οἴδαμεν; Eph. 5<sup>4</sup> ἴστε is probably indicative.

In view of the reference to the Word in vv. 21-22 (note δῶδ), it is likely that ταχὺς εἰς τὸ ἀκούσαι relates primarily to the hearing of the Word, and not merely to social intercourse generally. The same phrase is found in Pirke Aboth, v, 18, of the trait of the good pupil, who is "quick to hear and slow to forget." Cf. Gal. 4<sup>21</sup>.

εἰς τό. This can be justified in Greek as a development of the meaning "with reference to," cf. Lk. 12<sup>21</sup>, Rom. 16<sup>19</sup>, Dio Chrys. Or. 32, p. 361 A ἐγὼ δὲ μάλλον ἂν ὑμᾶς ἐπῆνουν βραδὺ μὲν φθεγγομένους ἐγκρατῶς δὲ σιγῶντας· γίνου πρὸς ὀργήν μὴ ταχὺς ἀλλὰ βραδύς, but it is not attested as common in ordinary secular Greek. Cf. e. g. Pirke Aboth, v, 18, הַרְבֵּה שׁוֹמֵר, "quick to hear," שׁוֹמֵר הַרְבֵּה, "slow to hear," Aboth R. Nathan, i, "be slow to judge."

Ecclus. 5<sup>11</sup> γίνου ταχὺς ἐν ἀκροάσει σου καὶ ἐν μακροθυμίᾳ φθέγγου ἀπόκρισιν is the closest parallel to this verse among the many precepts of the Wisdom-literature which relate to control of speech and restraint of anger. Cf. Ecclus. 12<sup>5</sup>, Prov. 10<sup>19</sup> (and Toy's note) 13<sup>3</sup> 15<sup>1</sup> 16<sup>22</sup> 17<sup>28</sup> 29<sup>20</sup>, Eccles. 7<sup>9</sup> 9<sup>18</sup>. See below on 3<sup>1-10</sup>. Cf. Pirke Aboth, ii, 14, "Be not easily provoked," also v, 17, and note Mt. 5<sup>22</sup>.

The interpretation of ὀργή given by Bengel (ut nil loquatur contra deum nec sinistre de deo), followed by Gebser, Calvin, Spitta, who take the anger as impatience against God, has little to commend it. On the other hand, Beyschlag's interpretation of ὀργή as "passionate disposition (leidenschaftliche Gemüthsverfassung)" of every kind, showing itself in murmurings against God and in fanaticism, as well as in quarrels, goes too far. The writer is thinking of what men ordinarily know as anger, against whomsoever directed. Its opposite is good temper and self-restraint.

(cf. Mt. 6<sup>28</sup>, 4 Macc. 10<sup>10</sup>), and the phrase is here due to the contrast with ὀργή ἀνδρός.

The whole sentence means: "Wrath doeth not righteousness," i. e. "Out of wrath righteous action does not spring." It is doubtless intended as a warning against wrong use of the doctrine that anger is sometimes valuable as an engine of righteousness.

Another interpretation, however, gives to ἐργάζεται the rarer sense "effect," "produce" (cf. 2 Cor. 7<sup>10</sup>), and refers the phrase "produce righteousness" to the effect of the teacher's anger on a pupil, cf. Zahn, Einleitung, I, § 4, note 2.

External attestation, possibility of conformation to 1<sup>1</sup>, and transcriptional tendency to strengthen the verb decide for ἐργάζεται. κατεργάζεται may have been intended to have the sense "produce."

21. δὶδ, "acting on this principle." An exhortation to a meek and receptive spirit. The emphatic word is παύτητι.

The word is used of clothes, but also of the removal of dirt from the body (cf. 1 Pet. 3<sup>1</sup> σαρκὸς ἀπόθεσις ῥύπου), and very commonly in Greek writers of the rejection of a mental or moral quality. For quotations from early Christian writers, see Mayor<sup>2</sup>, p. 66.

ῥυπαρίαν, "filthiness" (cf. 2<sup>1</sup>), probably carrying out the figure of clothes. Evil habits and propensities in general seem to be meant.

ῥυπαρίαν is complete in itself and does not need to be connected with κακίας. The force of πᾶσαν, however, probably continues to περισσεύαν, which would otherwise have the article.

περισσεῖαν κακίας, "excremental wickedness," "superfluity of naughtiness" (A.V.), cf. Rom. 5<sup>17</sup> τὴν περισσεῖαν τῆς χάριτος. κακίας is genitive of apposition, and the phrase calls attention to the fact that wickedness is in reality an excrescence on character, not a normal part of it. Cf. Philo, De somn. ii, 9, where he uses the figure of pruning off sprouts, καθάπερ γὰρ τοῖς δένδρεσιν ἐπιφύονται βλάσται περισσάαι κτλ.; De sacr. 9 τὰς περιττὰς φύσεις τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ, ἃς αἱ ἄμετροι τῶν παθῶν ἔσπειραν τε καὶ συνήνευσαν ὀρμαὶ καὶ ὁ κακὸς ψυχῆς γεωργὸς ἐφύτευσεν, ἀφροσύνη, μετὰ σπουδῆς ἀποκείρασθε and the figure of pruning used in Jn. 15<sup>1</sup>.

This is more forcible than to take the phrase to mean merely "abundance of evil," i. e. "the abounding evil," "the great amount of evil," which we find in our hearts, cf. 2 Cor. 8<sup>1</sup>, Lk. 6<sup>44</sup>. Still less natural is the interpretation of some who make περισσεῖα equivalent to περίσσευμα, "remainder" (cf. Mk. 8<sup>1</sup>), i. e. from the past life.* For other unacceptable interpretations, see Mayor and Beyschlag.

The fact that the Aramaic ܦܪܦ seems to be used to mean both "be foul" and "be abundant," as well as "sin," is probably of merely curious interest. See Buxtorf, Lexicon, cols. 1549-1550. More significant is the use of ܦܘܟܪܬܐ in the sense of sordid meanness by Teles (ed. Hense<sup>2</sup>, pp. 33, 37) and Plutarch, De adul. et amico, 19.

κακίας, "naughtiness" (A.V.), "wickedness" (R.V.). This more general meaning (cf. ῥυπαρίαν) is better here than the special sense of "malice," which is not rendered appropriate to the context even by ὀργή, and is not the natural opposite of πραΰτης; cf. Acts 8<sup>23</sup>. See, however, Lightfoot on Col. 3<sup>2</sup>, Trench, Synonyms, § xi.

Cf. Lightfoot on Col. 3<sup>12</sup>, Trench, Synonyms, § xlii; Heisen, Novae hypotheses, p. 637, gives some good Greek definitions of meekness.

This seems to refer (like δέξασθαι εἰς τὴν καρδίαν σου in Deut. 30<sup>1</sup>), not to the mere initial acceptance of the gospel, preached and heard, but (cf. ἔμφυτον) to attention to the knowledge of God's will, cf. Mt. 11<sup>14</sup>, 1 Cor. 2<sup>14</sup>. The Christian's ideal should not be much talking (which leads to angry strife) but meek and docile listening to the voice of God. There lies the way to salvation.

τὸν ἔμφυτον λόγον. ἔμφυτος, from ἐμφύειν, "implant," may mean "implanted" (R.V.), "innate" (Wisd. 12<sup>10</sup>), "intrinsic," "deep-rooted."

ἔμφυτος often means the "natural"—in contrast to the "taught" (Plato, Eryx, 398 C διδασκὸν ἢ ἀρετὴ ἢ ἔμφυτον), to the "extraneous" (Herod. ix, 94 ἔμφυτον μαντικὴν εἶχε, i. e. "as a power arising within himself"), or to the "acquired" (Justin Martyr, Apol. ii, 8 διὰ τὸ ἔμφυτον παντὶ γένει ἀνθρώπων σπέρμα τοῦ λόγου); it also means the "deep-rooted," in contrast to the "superficial" (Polyb. ii, 45 διὰ τὴν ἔμφυτον ἀδικίαν καὶ πλεονεξίαν φθονήσαντες). But, since the "implanted" or "inherent" is not necessarily innate, ἔμφυτος can be used of that which has been in fact bestowed, provided it is thought of as deeply rooted within the man.

On the other hand, the rendering "engrafted" (A.V.), which has been recommended to many by the connection with δέξασθαι, is unsuitable because it directly expresses the idea of "foreign," "applied from without," "not a natural growth," a meaning for which a derivative of ἐμφυτεύειν, "engraft," would be required.

In the present context the sense "innate" is made inappropriate by δέξασθε, by τὸν δυνάμενον κτλ., and by the absence of any special indication of this meaning. ἔμφυτος seems to be used here to describe the "word" as one which has entered into union with the nature and heart of man, "the word deeply rooted within you." The attribute adds a certain solemnity and intensity to the appeal.

Cf. Ep. Barnab. 1<sup>3</sup> οὕτως ἔμφυτον τῆς δωρεᾶς πνευματικῆς χάριν εἰλήφατε, "I rejoice . . . at your blessed and glorious spirits; so deeply rooted within is the grace of the spiritual gift that ye have received," 9<sup>3</sup> οἶδεν ὁ τὴν ἔμφυτον δωρεὰν τῆς διαθήκης αὐτοῦ θέμενος ἐν ἡμῖν, Pseudo-Ign. Eph. 17 διὰ τὴν ἐμφυτον τὸ περὶ θεοῦ παρὰ Χριστοῦ λαβόντες κριτήριον εἰς ἄγνοιαν καταπίπτομεν.

The ἐμφυτος λόγος itself is called in v. <sup>25</sup> νόμος τέλειος, and in vv. <sup>22-1</sup> is described as something to be done. It seems to mean the sum of present knowledge of God's will. It is inwrought into a man's nature and speaks from within, but this does not exclude that it should also exist for man's use in written or traditional form, whether in the law of Moses or in the precepts of Jesus. In v. <sup>25</sup>, as was natural for a Jew, the writer seems to have turned in his thought to the external expression in the law.

Cf. 4 Ezra 9<sup>21</sup>, "For, behold, I sow my law in you, and it shall bring forth fruit in you, and ye shall be glorified in it for ever"; 4 Ezra 8<sup>4</sup>, Deut. 30<sup>11-14</sup> (v. <sup>14</sup>, "But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it").

There is probably no allusion to the parable of the sower; yet cf. Mk. 4<sup>26</sup>, Lk. 8<sup>11</sup>.

The interpretation here given is substantially the one most common in modern commentaries. Similarly "Ecumenius" takes the whole phrase as referring to conscience, ἐμφυτον λόγον καλεῖ τὸν διακριτικὸν τοῦ βελτίονος καὶ τοῦ χείρονος, καθ' ὃ καὶ λογικοὶ ἐσμέν καὶ καλούμεθα.

Hort's note gives valuable material, and Heisen, Novae hypotheses, pp. 640-699, has collected a great number of more or less apposite quotations, and fully presented the older history of the exegesis. Calvin, De Wette, and others take ἐμφυτον as proleptic, "Receive the word and let it become firmly planted" (Calvin: ita suscipite ut vere inseratur); but the attributive position seems hardly to admit this.

Bohairic, "newly implanted."

Syriac, Peshitto, "received in our nature."

Latin,

The Latin insitus means "implanted" or "engrafted" or "innate"; see the instructive examples from Cicero and other writers in Harpers' Latin Dictionary.

The history of the English translation has been as follows:

Wiclif, 1380, "insent or joyned"; 1388, "that is planted."

Tyndale, 1526, "that is grafted in you."

Great Bible, 1539, "that is grafted in you."

Geneva, 1557, "that is grafted in you.",

Rheims, 1582, "engrafted."

A.V. 1611, "engrafted."

Evidently, when this was written, not merely the idea of salvation but the phrase "salvation of the soul" was fully current.

That hearing the commands of a law, or a teacher, must be followed by doing them is an obvious precept of ethics, often overlooked in practise in all ages. Cf. Ezek. 33<sup>31</sup>, Mt. 7<sup>14</sup> πᾶς οὖν ὅστις ἀκούει μου τοὺς λόγους τούτους καὶ ποιεῖ αὐτούς, ὁμοιωθήσεται ἀνθρῷ φρονίμῳ, 7<sup>21-22</sup>, Lk. 8<sup>21</sup> 11<sup>28</sup> 12<sup>47</sup>.

The antithesis of hearing and doing is frequently found in the Talmud. Cf. Pirke Aboth, i, 16; i, 18, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel I.: "All my days I have grown up amongst the wise, and have not found aught good for a man but silence; not learning but doing is the groundwork; and whoso multiplies words occasions sin," iii, 14, R. Chananiah b. Dosa: "Whosoever works are in excess of his wisdom, his wisdom stands; and whosoever wisdom is in excess of his works, his wisdom stands not," iii, 27, v, 20; also Sifre on Deut. 11<sup>12</sup>, quoted in Taylor, SJF<sup>1</sup>, p. 50, note 23; T. Cf. Seneca, Ep. 108. 35 sic ista ediscamus ut quæ fuerint verba sint opera.

This sense, "carry out what is commanded," for ποιεῖν and its derivatives ποιητής and ποιήσις, is a Hebraism (cf. πῶν) and peculiar to Biblical Greek. See Lex. s. v. ποιεῖν, and cf. 1 Macc. 2<sup>47</sup> τοὺς ποιητὰς τοῦ νόμου. In classical Greek ποιητής τοῦ νόμου means νομοθέτης.

μόνον ἀκροαταί] B minn ff vg with other versions read ἀκροαταὶ μόνον. The decision as to which reading is the emendation must rest wholly on the weight assigned to B ff. That a few minuscules omit μόνον is not significant.

παραλογιζόμενοι ἑαυτοὺς, "deceiving yourselves" by the notion that hearing is sufficient. Cf. v. 20, Gal. 6<sup>3</sup>, Mt. 7<sup>21-23</sup>, Rom. 2<sup>17-28</sup>. ἑαυτοὺς for ὑμεῖς αὐτοὺς, cf. J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 87.

κατανοοῦντι, "look at," with no thought of a hasty or any other special kind of glance; so κατενόησεν, v. 24.

τὸ πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως αὐτοῦ, "the face that nature gave him," seen in a mirror, is here used as a comparison for the ideal face, or character, which a man sees set forth in the law. As one may forget the former and have no lasting benefit from seeing it, so the mere ἀκροατής has no profit from the latter. τῆς γενέσεως is emphatic, to mark the distinction of the two kinds of "faces."

γενέσεως, gen. of attribute, or perhaps of source.

γένεσις is here used, as in 3<sup>6</sup>, in the sense of "Nature," much as in modern usage, to mean the created world (including man) as distinguished from God, and with a suggestion of its character as seen and temporal. So Plato, Resp. viii, p. 525 B; Plut. De gen. Socr. 24, p. 593 D; Philolaus ap. Stob. Ecl. i, c. 22 (ed. Wachsmuth, p. 197); and especially Philo in many passages, e. g. De post. Cain. 9 θεοῦ μὲν ἴδιον ἡρεμῖα καὶ στάσις, γενέσεως δὲ μετάβασις τε καὶ μεταβατικὴ πᾶσα κίνησις. For abundant references to Philo, see Mayor<sup>3</sup>, pp. 117 f. The Romans translated by rerum natura.

More congenial to the Jewish point of view, and hence more common in the O. T., is κτίσις, "creation," which is often used collectively in the later books (e. g. Ps. 104<sup>14</sup>, Judith 16<sup>14</sup>, Wisd. 16<sup>14</sup>, Eccclus. 49<sup>14</sup>, 3 Macc. 2<sup>1</sup> 7), in much the same sense as γένεσις in Philo.

Beyschlag states strongly certain difficulties of the usual interpretation of τὸ πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως, but fails to discover an acceptable substitute for the meaning given above. The meaning "birth" (cf. e. g. Gen. 32<sup>1</sup> εἰς τὴν γῆν τῆς γενέσεώς σου) is hardly adequate, since a man sees in the glass not merely the gift of birth but also the acquisitions of experience.

ἐσόπτρῳ. The ancients, like the modern Japanese, had polished metal mirrors of silver, copper, or tin. Cf. EB, "Mirrors," HDB, "Mirror."

The figure of a mirror is frequently used by Greek ethical writers (see references in Mayor, pp. 71 f.), but otherwise than here, with reference to the reflection of the actual, not of the ideal, man. Philo, De vita contempl. 10, compares the law (ἡ νομοθεσία) to a mirror for the rational soul (ἡ λογικὴ ψυχὴ), in a manner which recalls James's figure.

24. κατενόησεν, ἐπελάθετο. Probably gnomic aorist, which is intrinsically a form of popular expression, not a literary ἀπελήλυθεν, perfect, because of reference to a lasting state ("is off," "is gone"), not merely, like the other verbs, to a momentary act. See J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 144.

328 B. But cf. Buttmann (transl. Thayer), p. 197, where any "subtile distinction" is denied.

The word often implies "a rapid, hasty, and cursory glance," see the good examples quoted by Hort; but that shade of meaning seems here excluded by the latter half of the verse.

The omission of the article is frequent with νόμος (cf. 2<sup>8</sup>, 12, and see Sanday's note on Rom. 2<sup>13</sup>); but this explanation is here unnecessary, since the term is further defined by an attributive expression with the article, cf. Gal. 3<sup>21</sup>; see Blass-Debrunner, § 270; Winer, § 20. 4; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 74; L. Radermacher, Neutestamentliche Grammatik, 1911, pp. 19, 89.

τέλειον, cf. 1<sup>17</sup>, Rom. 12<sup>1</sup> τὸ θέλημα τοῦ θεοῦ, τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ εὐάρεστον καὶ τέλειον. The epithet is not in distinction from some other, imperfect, law, but means simply (Spitta) such a law that a better one is inconceivable (cf. Pss. 19 and 119), "the ideal perfection which is the goal of life" (Sanday). Philo, De vita Mos. ii, 3, M. p. 136 οἱ νόμοι κάλλιστοι καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς θείοι μηδὲν ὦν χρή παραλιπόντες. The perfection of the law in question is made plain by the further description of it as "the law of freedom."

τὸν τῆς ἐλευθερίας, "the law characterised by freedom."

This expression means "the law in the observance of which a man feels himself free." It could have been used of the Mosaic law by a devout and enthusiastic Jew; cf. Deut. 28<sup>47</sup>, Ps. 1<sup>3</sup> 19<sup>7-11</sup> 40<sup>3</sup> 54<sup>6</sup> 119<sup>32, 45, 97</sup>.

Cf. Pirke Aboth, iii, 8, R. Nechonyiah b. ha-Kanah (c. 80 A.D.): "Whoso receives upon him the yoke of Torah, they remove from him the yoke of royalty and the yoke of worldly care"; vi, 2, R. Jehoshua b. Levi (c. 240 A.D.): "Thou wilt find no freeman but him who is occupied in learning of Torah," with Taylor's notes on both passages; see the glorification of the law of Moses in contrast to other laws which were imposed, ὡς οὐκ ἐλευθέρους ἀλλὰ δούλους, in Philo, De vita Mos. ii, 9. These references show that there is no ground for the common affirmation that this phrase implies a sublimated, spiritualised view of the Jewish law, which, it is said, would have been impossible for a faithful Jew, cf. Jülicher, Einleitung<sup>5</sup>, p. 190. It is also evident that the words τέλειον and τῆς ἐλευθερίας are not introduced in order thereby to mark the law which James has in mind as distinguished from, and superior to, the Jewish law.

To a Christian "the perfect law of liberty" would include both the O. T. (parts of it perhaps being spiritually interpreted, cf. Mt. 5<sup>17-48</sup>, 1 Cor. 9<sup>21</sup>, Rom. 3<sup>27</sup> 8<sup>2</sup>, Ep. Barnab. 10) and the precepts and truths of the Gospel; cf. 2<sup>8-12</sup>, where the ten commandments and the commandment of love are all explicitly said to be a part of the law. The use of the phrase by a Christian implies that he conceived Christianity as a law, including and fulfilling (Mt. 5<sup>17</sup>) the old one. This is not inconsistent with an early date, for even Paul cannot avoid sometimes (1 Cor. 9<sup>21</sup>, Rom. 3<sup>27</sup>, Gal. 6<sup>2</sup>) referring to the new system as a law. Cf. Jn. 13<sup>34</sup>, 1 Jn. 2<sup>7</sup> 1<sup>4</sup>, 1 Tim. 1<sup>7</sup> θέλοντες εἶναι νομοδιδάσκαλοι (used of persons who present themselves as Christian teachers). See Introduction, supra, pp. 37 f.

The use of the term "law" in this inclusive sense is plainly of Jewish origin and illustrates the direct Jewish lineage of Christianity. But the tendency to conceive Christianity as essentially a system of morals (a "new law") was not specifically Jewish. It seems to have been present from primitive times in the common Gentile Christianity. "The Pauline conception of the Law never came to prevail, and Christendom at large did not know how, nor dare, to apply criticism to the O. T. religion, which is Law. (Without criticising the form they spiritualized the contents.) Consequently the formula that Christianity consists of Promise plus Spiritual Law is to be regarded as of extreme antiquity (uralt)" (Harnack, Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte, i<sup>2</sup>, p. 250; i<sup>4</sup>, p. 317).

Being the product of a permanent trait of human nature, to be seen in all ages, this moralism was not confined to any limited locality or single line of tradition in early Christianity. The doctrine of Christianity as law is emphasised in the Shepherd of Hermas, cf. Vis. i, 3<sup>4</sup>, Sim. v, 5<sup>3</sup> 6<sup>3</sup>, viii, 3<sup>2</sup> with Harnack's note. See also Barn. 2<sup>8</sup> (ὁ καινὸς νόμος τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἄνευ ζυγοῦ ἀνάγκης ὦν), with Harnack's note and the references contained in it. In Justin Martyr (e. g. Apol. 43) and the other apologists the idea is of frequent occurrence, and it was probably a part of the primitive theology of Asia Minor in which the more developed system of Irenæus had its roots. With Irenæus and his contemporaries the "new law" took an important place. See Ritschl, Die Entstehung der altkatholischen Kirche<sup>2</sup>, 1850, pp. 312-335 (with abundant citations), Harnack, Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte<sup>4</sup>, i, pp. 316 f. note 1, pp. 548 f. § 3; Loofs, Leitfaden zum Studium der Dogmengeschichte<sup>4</sup>, § 21. 4.

The familiar Stoic idea expressed in the maxims ὅτι μόνος ὁ σοφὸς ἐλεύθερος καὶ πᾶς ἀφρων δούλος, deo parere libertas est (Seneca, De vit. beat. 15) is expanded in Philo's tract about slavery and freedom, Quod omnis probus liber, for instance, γ παρ' οἷς μὲν ἂν ὀργή ἢ ἐπιθυμία ἢ τι ἄλλο πάθος ἢ καὶ ἐπιβουλὸς κακία δυναστεύει, πάντως εἰσι δούλοι, ἔσοι δὲ μετὰ νόμου ζῶσιν, ἐλεύθεροι. The combination of these ideas with the Jewish enthusiasm for the law is to be seen in 4 Macc., e. g. 5<sup>22-23</sup> 14<sup>3</sup> ὁ βασιλῆως λογισμοὶ βασιλικώτεροι καὶ ἐλευθέρων ἐλευθερώτεροι. A tacit claim that the Greek philosopher's ideal of freedom characterises the Jewish and Christian law may possibly underlie the language of James, whether or not such is to be traced in the rabbinical sayings quoted above.

Other interpretations given for the phrase are:

(1) "Natural law in the soul," "the light of nature." But nothing suggests this.

(2) That law which by the new covenant has become implanted in the souls of men, written in their hearts (Jer. 31<sup>33-34</sup>), so that the fulfilment of it springs from inner spontaneous impulse, not from enforced conformity to externally imposed precepts; in a word, the gospel on that side on which it is a rule of conduct (so Beyschlag).

The chief difference of this view from the one adopted above is that the latter takes the "law of liberty" in the sense of Christianity conceived as law, while Beyschlag takes it of that element in Christianity which is law. The real difference is not great. Beyschlag's main interest here is to show that the phrase does not imply the legalistic conception of Christianity of the Old Catholic period, and in this he is probably right.

(3) The Christian law in distinction from the Jewish, because it consists of positive and not of negative precepts. On this, see supra.

Philo enforces the same thought with a different figure, De sacr. Abel. et Cain. 25, "After having touched knowledge, not to abide in it (μὴ ἐπιμείναι) is like tasting meat and drink and then being prevented from satisfying one's hunger."

ἔργου, the addition of ἔργου to ποιητής gives a certain emphasis, "a doer who does."

μακάριος, cf. v. 12. See Jn. 13<sup>17</sup>, Lk. 12<sup>48</sup>, Seneca, Ep. 75, 7 non est beatus qui scit illa sed qui facit.

τῇ ποιήσει αὐτοῦ probably means collectively the man's whole conduct (Hebrew נְזֻחָיו), cf. Dan. 9<sup>14</sup> (Th.), but not without allusion to the preceding ποιητής; "he will be worthy of congratulation in these deeds of his."

μακάριος does not mean "prosperous" (Huther, Beyschlag, and others), but is the opposite of "blameworthy."

26-27. Careful attention to worship is no substitute for self-restraint, purity of life, and good works.

The connection with the preceding is here made in two ways: (1) by the advance from the more general precept of reality, "not hearing but doing," to the more specific, "not mere worship but doing good"; (2) by the reference in v. <sup>26</sup> to the sin of uncontrolled speech (cf. v. <sup>18</sup>).

26. δοκεῖ, "thinketh," i. e. "seemeth to himself." Cf. v. <sup>13</sup> μηδὲς λεγέτω; and, for the same use of δοκεῖν, Gal. 6<sup>2</sup>, 1 Cor. 10<sup>12</sup>, Jn. 5<sup>29</sup>.

This adjective is not found elsewhere excepting in lexicons, but derivatives are common, notably θρησκεια (vv. <sup>24</sup>, <sup>27</sup>), which means "religious worship, especially, but not exclusively, external, that which consists in ceremonies" (Lex.). θρησκός means "given to religious observances." The Greek words have somewhat the same considerable range of meaning as the English word "worship," with reference to the inner and the external aspects of religious worship. Mayor quotes a useful series of passages from Christian writers; see Trench, Synonyms, § xlviii; E. Hatch, Essays in Biblical Greek, pp. 55-57; and Lex. In the present verse θρησκός doubtless refers to attendance on the exercises of public worship, but also to other observances of religion, such as almsgiving, prayer, fasting (cf. Mt. 6<sup>1-18</sup>, 2 Clem. Rom. 16<sup>4</sup>). The passage implies that a large and recognised field of religious observance was naturally and obviously open to the persons whom James has in mind.

For both thought and language, cf. Philo, Quod det. pot. insid. 7: "Nor if anyone in his abundant wealth builds a temple with splendid contributions and expenditures, or offers hecatombs and never ceases sacrificing oxen, or adorns the temple with costly offerings, bringing timber without stint and workmanship more precious than any silver and gold, shall he be reckoned with the pious (μετ' εὐσεβῶν ἀναγεγράφω); for he also has erred from the path of piety, accounting worship a substitute for sanctity (θρησκείαν ἀντὶ δαιότητος ἡγοῦμενος)."

The English words "religion," "religious," used here and in v. <sup>27</sup>, for θρησκεία, θρησκός, are to be understood in the external sense of "worship," "religious rite," etc., in which formerly they were more used than at present. Cf. Milton: "With gay religions full of pomps and gold" (Paradise Lost, i, 372); Shakespeare: "Old religious man," i. e. religieux, "belonging to a religious order" (As You Like It, v, 4, 166).

As used at the present day, "religion" conveys the meaning of θρησκεία well enough in v. 16, but is inadequate in v. 17, where the Greek word means specifically "worship." See HDB, "Religion."

μὴ χαλιναγωγῶν γλῶσσαν, cf. v. 19 and 3<sup>1-18</sup>. For the metaphor, cf. Lucian, Tyrannicida, 4 τὰς τῶν ἡδονῶν ὀρέξεις χαλιναγωγούσης; De saltat. 70; Philo, De mut. nom. 41, De agric. 15 f., Quod det. pot. insid. 8; Plut. De sol. anim. 10, p. 967; Hermas, Mand. xii, 1; and the phrase ἀχάδινον στόμα in Aristoph. Ran. 862; Eurip. Bacchae, 386; Philo, De vita Mosis, iii, 25.

There is no good reason for limiting either the unbridled speech here referred to or the ὀργή of vv. 19<sup>1</sup>. to extravagant and intemperate utterance in preaching and teaching (cf. 3<sup>2</sup>); the precepts are of general applicability.

μάταιος, from μάτην, "in vain," "failing of its essential purpose." His very θρησκεία, in itself good, becomes useless, because spoiled by this fault of character. Cf. v. 20, and νεκρά, 2<sup>17</sup>, 28.

27. θρησκεία.

This is not a definition of religion, but a statement (by an oxymoron) of what is better than external acts of worship. James had no idea of reducing religion to a negative purity of conduct supplemented by charity-visiting.

Cf. Coleridge, Aids to Reflection, Introductory Aphorisms XXIII (and Note [8]): "Morality itself is the service and ceremonial (cultus exterior, θρησκεία) of the Christian religion."

τῆς ὁτιως δικαιούσης, ἔργων τε καὶ γνώσεως, and among Greek writers, Isocrates, Ad Nicod. p. 18<sup>11</sup> E, ἡγοῦ δὲ θύμα τοῦτο κάλλιστον εἶναι καὶ θεραπείαν μεγίστην ἂν ὡς βέλτιστον καὶ δικαιοτάτον σαυτὸν παρέχῃς. In the higher forms of heathen Hellenistic religious thought "a spiritual idea of God is contrasted with anthropomorphic conceptions and naïve worship of idols, while purity of heart, as the best sacrifice, and adhesion to the will of God, as the true prayer, are contrasted with foolish prayers and vows"; see P. Wendland, Hellenistisch-römische Kultur, 1912, p. 87, and note 8 (references).

The two words are often found in Greek writers in an ethical sense and together, Dion. Hal. A.R. viii, 43<sup>4</sup>; Plut. Pericl. 39; also Philo, Leg. all. i, 15, De animal. sacrif. idon. 13; Hermas, Mand. ii, 7, Sim. v, 7, Test. XII Patr. Jos. 4<sup>1</sup>, etc.

For ἀμύαντος, cf. Heb. 7<sup>11</sup>, 1 Pet. 1<sup>4</sup>; in the O. T. only found in Wisdom and 2 Maccabees.

The usage in the N. T. is to write either θεὸς πατήρ (e. g. Rom. 1<sup>7</sup>, Gal. 1<sup>5</sup>, and often) or ὁ θεὸς καὶ πατήρ (e. g. 1 Cor. 15<sup>34</sup> and, with ἡμῶν added, Gal. 1<sup>4</sup>, etc.). The only instance of θεὸς καὶ πατήρ, excepting the present one, is the easily explicable case Eph. 4<sup>6</sup>; the only cases of ὁ θεὸς πατήρ are Col. 1<sup>1</sup> (τῷ θεῷ πατρὶ in Codd. BC* and versions; τῷ θεῷ τῷ πατρὶ in Codd. DFG), 3<sup>17</sup>, and possibly 1<sup>12</sup>. Hence probably the article is a conformatory emendation and the formula here unique in the N. T.

The phrases ὁ θεὸς καὶ πατήρ and θεὸς πατήρ are found at the opening and elsewhere in Paul's epistles and other N. T. writings, but nowhere in the Gospels,* Acts, 1 John, or Hebrews. They evidently belong to the common semi-liturgical religious language which at once grew up among the early Christians, but not at all to the tradition of Jesus' sayings. This designation of God is possibly used here because it is the care for God's fatherless ones (cf. Ps. 68<sup>5</sup>) which is enjoined.

ὀρφανούς καὶ χήρας, the natural objects of charity in the community, cf. e. g. Deut. 27<sup>19</sup>, Ecclus. 4<sup>10</sup> γίνου ὀρφανοῖς ὡς πατήρ, καὶ ἀντὶ ἀνδρὸς τῇ μητρὶ αὐτῶν, Acts 6<sup>1</sup>, Barn. 20 (the Two Ways), Polyc. 6, Hermas, Mand. viii, 10.

For abundant further references, see Spitta, p. 57, note 5; Weinel, Die Wirkungen des Geistes und der Geiste, p. 145, note; Gebhardt and Harnack on Hermas, Mand. viii, 10.

ἄσπιλον, "unstained." For the same phrase, τηρεῖν ἄσπιλον, cf. 1 Tim. 6<sup>14</sup>.

τοῦ κόσμου. Cf. 4<sup>4</sup> ἡ φιλία τοῦ κόσμου, 2<sup>5</sup>.

This twofold statement of a moral ideal, compactly expressed in the latter half of this verse, is elaborated at great length in Hermas, Mand. viii. The comparison is instructive and points clearly to current religious modes of expression among the Jews.

κόσμος in the ethical sense in which it represents the world as opposed, or at least alien, to God is found only in Paul,

James, 2 Peter, and the Gospel and First Epistle of John. In the writings of John this sense is pushed to an extreme of sharp opposition. The usage, which is evidently wholly familiar to James and his readers, must have its origin in Jewish modes of thought (cf. the use of עֲוֹן and חַטָּאת in later Jewish literature for κόσμος, not merely for αἰών), but the history of the ethical sense of the word has not been worked out.

See HDB, art. "World"; PRE, art. "Welt"; Dalman, Die Worte Jesu, i, 1898, pp. 132-146 (Eng. transl. pp. 162-179).

CHAPTER II.

1-7. To court the rich and neglect the poor in the house of worship reverses real values.

In 2<sup>1-7</sup> the thought of the supreme importance of conduct, stated in 1<sup>26-27</sup>, is further illustrated by an instance from a situation of common occurrence. With this instance the writer connects his reply to two excuses or pretexts (vv. 9-13, 14-26), which are perversions of true religion, and in so doing he is led to enter upon broader discussions. Ch. 2 is more original and less a repetition of current Jewish ideas than any other part of the epistle.

ἐν προσωπολημψίαις "with acts of partiality." προσωπολημψία (found also Rom. 2<sup>11</sup>, Eph. 6<sup>9</sup>, Col. 3<sup>25</sup>, Polyc. Phil. 6), together with the cognate words προσωπολημπτεῖν (Jas. 2<sup>9</sup>), προσωπολήμπτης (Acts 10<sup>34</sup>), ἀπροσωπόλημπτος (ecclesiastical writers), ἀπροσωπολήμπτως (1 Pet. 1<sup>17</sup>, Clem. Rom. 1<sup>3</sup>, Barn. 4<sup>13</sup>), is a compound formed from the LXX translation of the O. T. phrase לָקַח פָּדוּתָא, λαμβάνειν πρόσωπον, Lev. 19<sup>15</sup>, Ps. 82<sup>3</sup>, etc. (For an analogous compound, cf. ἐμοσχοποίησαν, Acts 7<sup>41</sup>). These words were of course used only among persons acquainted with the Greek O. T., that is, Jews and Christians.

This group of expressions has had a history not unlike that of English "favour," "favouritism," etc., and, having often had originally an innocent sense, came in the O. T. to mean "respect of persons" in the sense of improper partiality. The early uses related chiefly to partiality on the part of a judge. In later use any kind of improper partiality might be meant, whether judicial favouritism or, as here, selfish truckling to the powerful. For the meaning of the Hebrew expression, see Gesenius, The-saurus, s. v. נָחֵץ, p. 916; cf. Lightfoot on Gal. 2<sup>9</sup>, and, for some similar O. T. expressions, Mayor on Jas. 2<sup>1</sup>.

The question "Do ye, in accepting persons, hold the faith of our Lord?" would express doubt whether a faith accompanied by this fault is true faith in Jesus Christ at all.

But this makes a weak and unnatural opening to the paragraph, is too subtle and indirect for so straightforward a writer, and does not suit so well the transition to the following sentence with γάρ. This writer (e. g. in vv. 4. 5. 7) uses the question-form rather in argument than in exhortation. Note, too, the directness with which his other paragraphs open, e. g. 1<sup>2</sup>, 3<sup>1</sup> 5<sup>1</sup>. Moreover, such a surprisingly drastic denial that the readers were Christian believers would require a clearer form of statement.

The view of Haussleiter, Der Glaube Jesu Christi und der christliche Glaube, 1891, and James Drummond, Epistle to the Galatians, 1893, p. 91, that these genitives after πίστις are subjective, not objective, is unnatural, and seems disproved by both Mk. 11<sup>22</sup> and Gal. 2<sup>16</sup>. See Sanday on Rom. 3<sup>21</sup>. Hort paraphrases: the faith "which comes from Him and depends on Him," but this is unnecessary.

τῆς δόξης. "Glory" is the majesty and brightness of light in which God dwells, and which belongs also to the Messiah; see Sanday on Rom. 3<sup>22</sup>, G. B. Gray, art. "Glory," in HDB; A. von Gall, Die Herrlichkeit Gottes, 1900.

The interpretation now most commonly given for this difficult expression is probably right. τῆς δόξης is genitive of characteristic (cf. Lk. 16<sup>8</sup> 18<sup>8</sup>, Heb. 9<sup>5</sup> Χερουβείν δόξης), limiting the whole preceding phrase τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, i. e. "our glorious Lord Jesus Christ." The expression is a not altogether happy expansion of ὁ κύριος τῆς δόξης (1 Cor. 2<sup>8</sup>), cf. ὁ θεὸς τῆς δόξης, Ps. 29<sup>3</sup>, Acts 7<sup>2</sup>, ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης, Eph. 1<sup>17</sup>. By its solemnity the writer may intend to emphasise the inconsistency between the great privilege of Christian faith and this petty discrimination between rich and poor.

No convincing objection can be made to this interpretation, although there is no complete parallel to it. Among the other interpretations the following deserve mention:

(1) ταῖς προσωποληψίαις τῆς δόξης, "partiality arising from your own opinion," or "partiality arising from external glory" (admiratio hominum secundum externum splendorem, Michaelis). But the separation of the words is too great, and the meaning "glory" for δόξα in this context too obvious, to permit this interpretation, and it is now held by no one.

(2) τὴν πίστιν τῆς δόξης, "faith in the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Pesh.), or "Christ-given faith in the glory" (i. e. the glory which we are to receive, Rom. 8<sup>10</sup>), or "the glorious faith in Christ." But the last two of these are forced, and the first involves too strange an order of words to be acceptable, in spite of such partial analogies as Acts 4<sup>12</sup>, 1 Thess. 2<sup>11</sup>. Cf. Buttmann, § 151, III; Winer, § 61, 4; for many illustrations of hyperbaton from LXX and secular authors, see Heisen, Notae hypothesees, pp. 768 ff.

(3) Various interpretations separate off some part of the phrase τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which is then connected with τῆς δόξης, and the two together taken as in apposition with the rest of the phrase. The least objectionable of these is perhaps that of Ewald, "our Lord, Jesus Christ of glory"; but this division is unnecessary, and it seems impossible that the writer should not have meant to keep together the whole of the familiar designation.

(4) A.V. and R.V. supply τοῦ κυρίου, and translate "the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory." There are abundant parallels for this latter phrase, but none for such a singular omission.

(5) Bengel, Mayor, Hort, WH. mg., and others take τῆς δόξης as in apposition to the preceding and as referring to Christ (perhaps as the Shekinah) under the title of "the Glory." But the evidence that this is a possible use of ἡ δόξα (see the full note of Mayor, pp. 79 ff., cf. Lk. 2<sup>11</sup>, Eph. 1<sup>17</sup>, Tit. 2<sup>13</sup>, Heb. 1<sup>3</sup>) is inadequate.

(6) Spitta and Massebieau think the words ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ an interpolation by the Christian editor. This would leave the expression "the Lord of glory," referring, as in Enoch, to God. Beyschlag's answer to this, that an interpolator would not have broken the phrase τοῦ κυρίου τῆς δόξης, is not quite satisfactory, since the natural words to follow τοῦ κυρίου are ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. But the interpolation is not sufficiently obvious to justify itself apart from the general theory to which it belongs. See the long note in Mayor.

συναγωγὴν means "meeting," and it is not necessary here to distinguish between the "meeting" as an occasion and as an assembled body of persons. It is the proper word for a Jewish religious meeting, but is occasionally used, chiefly by writers having some Jewish or Syrian connection, for a Christian meeting; cf. Herm. Mand. xi, 9 ὅταν οὖν ἔλθῃ ὁ ἄνθρωπος ὁ ἔχων τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ θεῖον εἰς συναγωγὴν ἀνδρῶν δικαίων; Ign. Polyc. 4<sup>2</sup>; Iren. Hær. iv, 31<sup>1, 2</sup>; Epiph. Hær. xxx, 18 συναγωγὴν δὲ οἱτοὶ [the Ebionites] καλοῦσι τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ οὐχὶ ἐκκλησίαν. The Christian Palestinian Aramaic dialect used a single word [ܥܬܪܝܢܝܬܐ] as well for "synagogue" as for "church." In view of this wide-spread occasional use, no trustworthy inference as to the place of writing of the epistle, still less any conclusion as to its Jewish-Christian authorship, or as to the nationality of the persons addressed, can be drawn from the occurrence of this word here.

The material is fully collected and well discussed by Zahn, Einleitung, i, § 4, note 1; Harnack in his long note on Hermas, Mand. xi, 9; Schürer, GVV, ii, § 27, notes 11 and 12.

The meaning "place of meeting," "meeting-house," natural if this were a Jewish synagogue, is wholly unlikely for a Christian writing. The only parallel to be adduced would be the inscription (from a locality not far from Damascus) Συναγωγὴ Μαρκωνιστῶν, κώμ(ης) Λεβάβων τοῦ π(υρ)οῦ καὶ σ(ωτῆ)ρ(ος) Ἰη(σοῦ) Χρηστοῦ, κρονολῶ Παύλου πρεσβ(υτέρου), τοῦ λχ' ἑτους, Le Bas-Waddington, Inscript. grecques et lat. iii, no. 2558. The date is A.D. 318-319.

ἐν ἐσθῇτι λαμπρᾷ, cf. Lk. 23<sup>11</sup>.

The term λαμπρός seems here to refer to elegant and luxurious, "fine," clothes (cf. Rev. 18<sup>14</sup>), but it can also be used of freshness or cleanness (Rev. 15<sup>4</sup>) without reference to costliness, and sometimes (Acts 10<sup>30</sup>) appears to mean "shining." Its natural opposite in all these senses is ῥυπαρός, "dirty," "shabby," as below, cf. Philo, De Joseph. 20, ἀντὶ ῥυπώσεως λαμπρὰν ἐσθῆτα ἀντιδόντες. Mayor gives other instructive references. See also Lex. s. vv. λαμπρός and ῥυπαρός.

κάθου. This form of the imperative (for the more literary κάθησο), found uniformly in O. T. and N. T., was doubtless in ordinary colloquial use, as is attested by its occurrence in comic writers of the fifth and fourth centuries B.C. and in post-classical usage. See Lex. s. v. and Winer-Schmiedel, § 14, 3, note 3.

καλῶς. Usually explained as meaning "in a good seat," "comfortably." But the usage does not fully justify this (see Mayor's citations), and some polite idiom in the sense of "please," "pray," is to be suspected. In various Greek liturgies the minister's direction to the worshipping congregation, στῶμεν καλῶς, presents the same difficulty and suggests the same explanation. See F. E. Brightman, Liturgies, Eastern and Western, vol. i, Oxford, 1896, pp. 43, 49, 383, 471. The Syrian liturgies sometimes merely carry this over, "Stōmen kalōs," but also render by, "Stand we all fairly," ibid. pp. 72, 74, 104. On the Jewish custom of distinguished places in the synagogue, cf. Mt. 23<sup>6</sup>, Mk. 12<sup>39</sup>, Lk. 11<sup>48</sup> 20<sup>46</sup>, and see "Synagogue," in EB and HDB.

A noteworthy commentary on these verses is offered by a passage found in various ancient books of church order. Its oldest form is perhaps that in the Ethiopic Statutes of the Apostles (ed. Horner, 1904, pp. 195 f.): "And if any other man or woman comes in lay dress [i. e. in fine clothes], either a man of the district or from other districts, being brethren, thou, presbyter, while thou speakest the word which is concerning God, or while thou hearest or readest, thou shalt not respect persons, nor leave thy ministering to command places for them, but remain quiet, for the brethren shall receive them, and if they have no place (for them) the lover of brothers or of sisters, having risen, will leave place for them."

" . . . And if a poor man or woman either of the district or of the (other) districts should come in and there is no place for them, thou, presbyter, make place for such with all thy heart, even if thou wilt sit on the ground, that there should not be respecting the person of man but of God."

See also the Syriac Didascalia apostolorum, 12; Apostolic Constitutions, ii, 58; E. v. d. Goltz, "Unbekannte Fragmente altchristlicher Gemeindeordnungen," in Sitzungsberichte der kgl. preuss. Akademie, 1906, pp. 141-157. There is no sufficient indication that the passage is dependent on James.

στῆθι ἐκεῖ καὶ κάθου] C*.

The reading of B ff makes the rough words an invitation to stand or to take a poor seat. So the Sahidic, which thus on the whole supports B ff. The readings of A al and N al seem to be different emendations, both due to the wish to make στῆθι explicit and so to create a better parallelism. But since the indefinite ἐκεῖ does not in itself imply any disrespect to the visitor, the effect is to lessen rather than intensify the rudeness of στῆθι, and the product is a weaker text than that of B ff (sah). The text of B ff is thus on both external (see p. 85) and internal grounds to be preferred.

ἢ κάθου ἐκεῖ ὑπὸ τὸ ὑποπόδιόν μου, i. e. in a humble place. This is a sorry alternative to standing. Cf. Deut. 33<sup>s</sup> ὑπό σε "at thy feet," Lk. 8<sup>ss</sup> 10<sup>ss</sup>, Acts 22<sup>s</sup> παρὰ τοὺς πόδας.

These persons who come into the meeting are visitors, who may be won for the church, and the treatment of them at this critical moment reveals the real feeling of the members toward the relative worth of the different classes in society. The visitors seem clearly distinguished from the members of the congregation; and nothing indicates, or suggests, that they are members of sister churches. They are undoubtedly outsiders, whether Jews or Gentiles.

4. οὐ] Omitted by B ff minn. The repetition of —οὐ οὐ might suggest either the insertion or the omission of the word in transcription. The attestation and the greater intrinsic vigour of the sense speak for the omission.

KLP minn read καὶ οὐ, the καὶ being added to indicate the apodosis.

διεκρίθητε. "Ye have wavered," "doubted," i. e. "practically, by your unsuitable conduct, departed from and denied the faith of v. <sup>1</sup>, and thus fallen under the condemnation pronounced in 1<sup>8-9</sup> against the δῆψυχος." Cf. 1<sup>8</sup> and note, 3<sup>17</sup> ἀδιδάκритος; and, for the mode of argument, 1<sup>8</sup> δῆψυχος, 4<sup>8</sup> ἀμαρτωλοί, δῆψυχοι.

Of the various meanings proposed for διεκρίθητε this one, which is common in the N. T. although not attested in secular Greek, yields in the present context the best sense, being especially recommended by the allusion to the "waverer" of 1<sup>8</sup>. Cf. Mt. 21<sup>21</sup>, Mk. 11<sup>23</sup>, Rom. 14<sup>23</sup>, Jas. 1<sup>8</sup>, and the kindred sense "hesitate" in Acts 10<sup>23</sup>, Rom. 4<sup>23</sup>.

Other interpretations which have been given are classified as follows by Huther, whose elaborate note, as reproduced with additions by Beyschlag, pp. 103 f., should be consulted for the history of the exegesis.

- διεκρίνεσθαι = (1) separare;
 (2) discrimen facere;
 (3) judicare;
 (4) dubitare ("hesitate").

Under each of these senses several interpretations are possible according as the verb is taken as an affirmation or a question, and under several of them a choice between an active and passive meaning is possible. Most of the interpretations are too remote from the natural suggestion of the context, or any natural meaning of the verb, to be worth considering, and none suits on the whole so well as the interpretation given above.

The renderings of A.V., "Are ye not then partial?" and R.V. mg., "Do ye not make distinctions?" are based on (2), the verb being given an active sense. This corresponds to the view of Grotius and others, and is perhaps not impossible, even with the passive aorist, but at best it would be unusual, it runs counter to all N. T. usage, and it gives an inherently weak and tautologous sense. To R.V. text, "Are ye not divided?" no objection from the ordinary meaning of the verb can be brought, but it is less idiomatic and pointed than the rendering "waver."

κριταί means "judges"; it cannot mean "approvers" (as Wetstein takes it).

κριταὶ διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν, "judges with evil thoughts," gen. of quality. Evidently, like διεκρίθητε, this describes in language already familiar an admittedly wrong attitude. There is a play on words in διεκρίθητε, κριταί, which cannot be imitated in English, and which goes far to account for the introduction of κριταί into a context to which the idea of "judging" in any proper sense is foreign. That προσωποληψία is the characteristic sin of the bad judge may also have had its influence. The sentence must be taken to mean: "You have passed judgments (i. e. on rich or poor) prompted by unworthy motives."

For διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν, cf. Mt. 15<sup>19</sup>, Mk. 7<sup>21</sup>, and Ps. 56<sup>1</sup>. διαλογισμός (like הַשְׁקָרָה) is in Biblical usage a general word which includes purpose as well as deliberation. See Lightfoot on Phil. 2<sup>14</sup>; Hatch, Essays, p. 8.

5-7. The poor are the elect heirs of God, whereas the rich are your persecutors.

These verses are intended to reinforce the exhortation of v. 1 by pointing out how peculiarly heinous in the readers' case is partiality in favour of the rich.

5. ἀκούσατε, as in diatribes, cf. Bultmann, Stil der paulinischen Predigt, p. 32, with foot-notes.

τοὺς πτωχοὺς τῷ κόσμῳ, "the poor by the standard of the world," τῷ κόσμῳ is dative of reference, or "interest," cf. Acts 7<sup>20</sup> ἀστεῖος τῷ θεῷ, 2 Cor. 10<sup>4</sup>, see Hadley-Allen, § 771; Winer, § 31, 4, a. Cf. 1 Tim. 6<sup>17</sup>, on which Schöttgen quotes עני עולם, Baba bathra 8, 2; עני עולם, ibid. 4, 1.

Others (Weiss, etc.) take τῷ κόσμῳ as naming the possession which the poor lack. But the poor lack not "the world" but the world's goods.

The election of the poor to privileges is not here said to be due to any merit of their poverty, but, in fact, poverty and election coincide. This does not deny that an occasional rich man may have become a Christian, nor affirm that all the poor have been chosen, cf. 1 Cor. 1<sup>26-28</sup>, Mt. 19<sup>22-24</sup>.

The contrast of poor and rich in different spheres is a natural one. See quotations in Mayor<sup>2</sup>, p. 86, and Spitta, p. 63; cf. Rev. 2<sup>9</sup>, Test. XII Patr. Gad 7<sup>6</sup>.

Other modes of analysis of the meaning of ἐν πίστει do not affect the general sense of the phrase, but they seem less adapted to the context. Thus:

- (1) "rich by reason of faith";
- (2) "rich in having an abundance of faith," cf. Eph. 2<sup>4</sup>, 1 Cor. 1<sup>5</sup>, 1 Tim. 6<sup>18</sup>. This unduly limits the range of the "riches."

This expression corresponds to Mt. 25<sup>34</sup>, 1 Cor. 6<sup>9, 10</sup> 15<sup>50</sup> (κληρονομεῖν βασιλείαν), Gal. 5<sup>21</sup>, as well as to κληρονομεῖν ζωὴν αἰώνιον in Mt. 19<sup>29</sup> 25<sup>34</sup>, Mk. 10<sup>17</sup>, Lk. 10<sup>25</sup> 18<sup>18</sup> (cf. Dalman, Worte Jesu, i, pp. 102-104; E. Tr. pp. 125-127).

"Heirs" are persons who are appointed to receive the inheritance. The kingdom is here thought of as still future (as is shown by ἐπηγγελίατο). The kingdom is not further described, nor does James use the term again, and it is possible to say of the term here only that it denotes the great blessing which God offers to his chosen, being thus practically equivalent to salvation. Cf. Mt. 5<sup>3, 10</sup>, Lk. 12<sup>31</sup> 1.

See Westcott's note on Heb. 6<sup>12</sup> for the history of the use of the term κληρονομός.

ἦς ἐπηγγείλατο τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν. On the expression, cf. 2 Tim. 4<sup>18</sup>, Ep. ad Diogn. 10.

Cf. 1<sup>12</sup>, τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς κτλ., with note. Life and the kingdom are practically identical.

ἐπηγγείλατο does not refer to any one specific occasion, and hence is better translated "has promised." Cf. Burton, Syn-tax of the Moods and Tenses of N. T. Greek, §§ 46, 52. The "promise" was implicit in the very conception of the kingdom.

6. ἡτιμάσατε, "dishonoured," i. e. by your truckling to the rich. On ἀτιμάζειν, cf. Prov. 14<sup>21</sup> ὁ ἀτιμάζων πένητας ἀμαρτάνει, 22<sup>22</sup>, Ecclus. 10<sup>22</sup>, Acts 5<sup>41</sup>.

For examples of such oppression, cf. Jas. 5<sup>4, 6</sup>, and references in Spitta, p. 64, notes 9, 10, and 11; also Lucian, Nec. 20. ΨΗΦΙΣΜΑ. Ἐπειδὴ πολλὰ καὶ παράνομα οἱ πλούσιοι δρῶσι παρὰ τὸν βίον ἀρπάζοντες καὶ βιαζόμενοι καὶ πάντα τρόπον τῶν πενήτων καταφρονούντες κτλ.

αὐτοί, "Is it not they who," etc. Similarly, v. 7. On αὐτός in nominative as personal pronoun with no intensive force, cf. Lex. s. v. αὐτός, II, 2.

This does not seem to refer to religious persecution, which was at least as likely to proceed from the side of the poor as of the rich, but to other oppression, with legal action, arising from the ordinary working of social forces in an oriental community and having to do with wages, debts, rents, and the like.

Many think, indeed, of religious persecution (as Acts 6<sup>19</sup>). But this is not naturally suggested by καταδυναστεύουσιν (instead of which we should in that case expect διώκουσιν, cf. Mt. 5<sup>10</sup>, Lk. 21<sup>12</sup>, Acts 7<sup>12</sup>, Gal. 1<sup>12</sup>). Nor is it made necessary by βλασφημοῦσιν, which seems to refer to a different act of hostility and is properly so punctuated by WH.

εἰς κριτήρια, "before judgment-seats," "into courts," cf. Sus. 49. On established courts throughout Palestine, see EB, "Government," §§ 30, 31; Schürer, GJV, § 23, II.

7. βλασφημοῦσιν. Blasphemy is injurious speech, especially irreverent allusion to God and sacred things.

For blasphemy from the Christian point of view, i. e. against Christ, cf. Acts 13<sup>45</sup> 18<sup>6</sup> 26<sup>11</sup>, 1 Tim. 1<sup>13</sup>, 1 Cor. 12<sup>3</sup>, Justin, Dial. § 117 (Χριστοῦ) ὄνομα βεβηλωθῆναι κατὰ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν καὶ βλασφημεῖσθαι οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς τοῦ λαοῦ ὑμῶν καὶ διδάσκαλοι εἰργάσαντο, Pliny, Ep. x, 97<sup>5</sup>; Polyc. Mart. 9<sup>3</sup> λοιδορήσων τὸν Χριστόν. Cf. Hermas, Sim. ix, 19<sup>1</sup> (of apostates). On blasphemy against God by the rich among the Jews, cf. Enoch 5<sup>4</sup> 94<sup>8</sup> <sup>1</sup> and other passages collected by Spitta, p. 65.

naturally transferred to the Christians, with a reference in their case to the name of Christ. Cf. Hermas, Sim. viii, 6<sup>4</sup>, τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου τὸ ἐπικληθὲν ἐπ' αὐτούς, and other cases of the use of ὄνομα in Hermas, Sim. viii, ix, and xi, given in Heitmüller, Im Namen Jesu, 1903, p. 92. The phrase does not necessarily refer to baptism, nor to any definite name (e. g. Χριστιανοί) by which Christians were known. See Harnack's note on Hermas, Sim. viii, 6<sup>4</sup>.

6-7. It is very evident that "the rich" here are not Christians. Those who maintain the opposite are driven to give to βλασφημοῦσιν the meaning rejected above. The rich are plainly neighbours who do not belong to the conventicle but may sometimes condescend to visit it.

No word, however, hints that the two classes do not worship the same God, and the whole tone of the passage seems to imply a less complete departure from the dominant religion of the community than would have been the case in Rome or any heathen city. If the whole surrounding population were heathen, the argument would have to be differently turned. Contrast the tone of Phil. 2<sup>15</sup> ff., Eph. 4<sup>17-19</sup>, Col. 3<sup>7</sup>, 1 Cor. 6<sup>1-9</sup>.

A settled and quiet state of things is indicated, in which the normal relations of the different classes of society prevail. The sense of missionary duty is not prominent.

The situation is thus that of a sect of some sort living in a community whose more powerful members, though worshipping the same God as the sect, do not belong to it.

8-11. The law of Love is no excuse for respect of persons. The cancelling of one precept by another is not permissible, for the whole law must be kept. The royal law is therefore not a license to violate other parts of the law.

These verses are a reply to a supposed excuse, viz. that the Christian is required by the law of love to one's neighbour to attend to the rich man. This excuse by the pretext of "love" is parallel to the excuse by the pretext of "faith," vv. 14-26. Cf. also 1<sup>13, 26</sup>. Like Mt. 5<sup>17</sup> ff., this passage is opposing a wrong and self-indulgent use of the principle that the law of love covers the whole law.

νόμον βασιλικόν, "the royal law." νόμος means the Law of God, as known to the readers through the Christian interpretation of the O. T. The article is probably omitted because νόμος is treated as a quasi-proper noun, as in 2<sup>11</sup>, 12 4<sup>11</sup>; cf. λόγος, Jas. 1<sup>22</sup>, 23.

Most take the "royal law" to be identical with the γραφή (legum regina) quoted immediately. But νόμος is not used in the sense of ἐντολή (cf. Mt. 22<sup>36</sup> ποία ἐντολή μεγάλη ἐν τῷ νόμῳ), and it is therefore better to take βασιλικόν as a decorative epithet describing the law as a whole, of which the following precept is a part. The expression κατὰ τὴν γραφήν κτλ. implies, indeed, that the perfect observance of this precept covers the observance of the whole law, as in Mk. 12<sup>31</sup>, Rom. 13<sup>8</sup>, Gal. 5<sup>14</sup>, cf. Lev. 19<sup>18</sup>, Jn. 15<sup>12</sup>.

It is thus not necessary to make an unnatural distinction between νόμος here and in v. 9.

βασιλικόν, i. e. "supreme." Cf. Philo, De justitia, 4 βασιλικὴν δὲ εἵωθεν ὀνομάζειν Μωσῆς ὁδὸν τὴν μέσσην, De congress. erud. grat. 10; 4 Macc. 14<sup>3</sup>. The term either goes back to the tradition that kings are supreme sovereigns, or else is drawn from the use of βασιλεύς to mean the Roman emperor.

At the same time there may be here an allusion to the Stoic conception of the wise as "kings," parallel to the lurking allusion in 1<sup>25</sup> to the conception of the wise as alone "free." The Law of Christians is alone fit for "kings." Cf. the similar application of the word βασιλικός in Clem. Al. Strom. vi, 18, p. 825; vii, 12, p. 876, and the other passages quoted by Mayor<sup>2</sup>, p. 90; also 1 Pet. 2<sup>9</sup>. See Knowling's good note, p. 49, Zahn, Einlei- tung, i, § 6, note 1, and for the Stoic paradox the references in Zeller, Philosophie der Griechen<sup>4</sup>, III, i, p. 256, note 5.

As in 1st, so here, the attribute of the law is decorative and suggestive only; it is not meant specifically to distinguish the true law from some other inferior one.

The interpretation of βασιλικόν as "given by the King" (God or Christ) has nothing to recommend it. Equally little has Calvin's ingenious reference to "the king's highway," "plana scilicet, recta, et aequabilis."

τὸν πλησίον. Properly "neighbour," in LXX for Hebrew זָרַח, "friend," "fellow countryman," or "other person" generally, and so, under the influence of the teaching of Jesus (Lk. 10<sup>25-27</sup>), equivalent to ὁ ἕτερος (cf. especially Rom. 13<sup>8</sup>. 10 15<sup>2</sup>).

9. ἀμαρτίαν ἐργάζεσθε, cf. 1st and note. Such conduct is sin, directly forbidden by the law, and hence cannot be excused as a fulfilment of the royal law.

10. ὅστις . . . τηρήσῃ, with ἄν omitted. Cf. Burton, Moods and Tenses, 307, Blass-Debrunner, § 380.

The future is probably an emendation called out by the absence of ἄν. The same thing has happened to πταίω, for which KLP minn<sup>plur</sup> have πταίσαι. The synonyms, and the conflation in 33, are interesting.

πάντων ἔνοχος. πάντων is neuter, and the genitive, as in classical Greek, denotes the crime. This is a rhetorical way of saying that he is a transgressor of "the law as a whole" (παράβτης νόμου, v. 11), not of all the precepts in it.

For similar emphasis on the several individual precepts which make up the law, cf. Mt. 5<sup>19</sup>, and especially Test. XII Patr. Aser 2<sup>1-10</sup> (Charles's translation): "Another stealeth, doeth unjustly, plundereth, defraudeth, and withal pitieth the poor: this too hath a twofold aspect, but the whole is evil. He who defraudeth his neighbour provoketh God, and sweareth falsely against the Most High, and yet pitieth the poor: the Lord who commandeth the law he setteth at nought and provoketh, and yet he refresheth the poor. He defileth the soul and maketh gay the body; he killeth many, and pitieth a few: this too hath a twofold aspect, but the whole is evil. Another committeth adultery and fornication, and abstaineth from meats, and when he fatteth he doeth evil, and by the power of his wealth overwhelmeth many; and notwithstanding his excessive wickedness he doeth the commandments: this, too, hath a twofold aspect, but the whole is evil. Such men are hares; for they are half clean, but in very deed are unclean. For God in the tables of the commandments hath thus declared."

The roots of this verse evidently lie in rabbinical modes of emphasising the importance of certain special precepts and of every precept. Thus Shemoth rabba 25 fin., "The Sabbath weighs against all the precepts"; Shabbath, 70, 2, "If he do all, but omit one, he is guilty for all severally." Schöttgen and Wetstein give many sayings of similar tenor from rabbinical writings of various dates.

Augustine, Ep. 167 ad Hier., draws a comparison with the Stoic doctrine of the solidarity of virtues and vices. The Stoic doctrine is that virtue is an indivisible whole, a man is either virtuous or vicious. The wise (or virtuous) is free from fault, the foolish (or vicious) does no right act; hence ἵσα τὰ ἀμαρτήματα καὶ τὰ κατορθώματα. The character of every act depends on the controlling inner purpose and disposition. See Zeller, Philosophie der Griechen, III, i, pp. 251-263, with abundant references. This doctrine has plainly nothing to do with that of James.

οὐ μοιχεύεις. οὐ follows the regular N. T. usage in present simple conditions. Cf. Buttmann, § 148; Burton, § 469; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 170 f.; Winer, § 55, 2, c (where it is said that εἰ οὐ makes the negative emphatic). Here, since the negative belongs only to a part of the protasis (μοιχεύεις) and not to the rest (φονεύεις), οὐ is in any case necessary.

12-13. General exhortation to remember the Judgment, which is the sanction of the law; together with special inculcation of the precept of mercy, violated by their respect of persons.

12. λαλεῖτε, ποιεῖτε, cf. 1<sup>19</sup>, 22-25, 26, a section which seems to be in mind in this summarising exhortation.

διὰ νόμου ἐλευθερίας, "under the law of liberty." Cf. 1<sup>26</sup>; διὰ here indicates the "state or condition in which one does or suffers something"; see Lex. s. v. διὰ, A. I. 2; cf. e. g. Rom. 2<sup>13</sup> διὰ νόμου κριθήσονται.

13. γάρ introduces the reason why the sin of respect of persons will be punished with special severity. It involves a breach of the law of mercy, and that has as its consequence unmerciful punishment.

ἀνέλεος. Found only here for the usual ἀνηλεής, ἀνελεής, but regularly formed from the noun ἔλεος; see Moulton and Milligan, Vocabulary of the Greek Testament.

κατακαυχᾶται ἔλεος κρίσεως, "mercy boasts over (or against) judgment." ἔλεος is human mercy shown in practise, κρίσεως is God's condemnatory judgment, cf. Jas. 5<sup>12</sup>, Jn. 5<sup>34</sup>. This gives the converse of the previous sentence. As the unmerciful will meet with no mercy, so a record of mercy will prevent condemnation. Cf. 5<sup>30</sup> and Eccus. 3<sup>30</sup> 40<sup>17</sup>, Tob. 4<sup>8-11</sup>. The doctrine (and need) of God's forgiving mercy is here assumed in regular Jewish fashion.

On the great importance ascribed to mercy as a virtue in Jewish thought, see Bousset, Religion des Judéens<sup>2</sup>, pp. 162 f.

The contrast of God's opposing attributes of mercy and justice does not seem to be in mind here. The contrast of ἔλεος and κρίσις is a natural one, and is found in both Greek and Jewish sources, cf. Diog. Laert. ii, 3<sup>8</sup>, references to Bereshith 1. in Wetstein, and the references in Spitta, p. 70, note 6.

κατακαυχᾶται is found elsewhere only in Jas. 3<sup>14</sup>, Rom. 11<sup>18</sup>, Zech. 10<sup>18</sup>, Jer. 50[27]<sup>11</sup> κατακαυχᾶσθε διαρκέζοντες τὴν κληρονομίαν μου, 50[27]<sup>14</sup>. It does not occur in secular writers. 1 Cor. 15<sup>55</sup> well illustrates the meaning of this word.

κατακαυχᾶσθε is insufficiently attested and is probably due to an error. κατακαυχᾶσθω is the harder reading, but the group A 33 points to an emendation.

ἔλεος κρίσεως] CKL minn read ἔλεον κρίσεως. Since the accusative yields no sense, this must have been understood as τὸ ἔλεον, attested by Ps.-Herodian, Epimerismoï, ed. Boissonade, 1819, p. 235, and not found elsewhere.

This touches another case of substitution of a sham for the reality; cf. 1<sup>22-25</sup>, 2<sup>8</sup> 1. 2<sup>8</sup> 1. As an excuse, faith is worth no more than love.

The fundamental idea of a warning against sham is common enough to all moralists. The special interest here is that James makes his contrast not between, e. g., sayings and doings, but between two terms important in Christian thought, viz., faith and works, and that in the course of his argument he uses other theological terms and reveals an acquaintance with many diverse theological conceptions and modes of thought.

λέγω, "say," in presenting his claim to be approved of men and of God. So 1<sup>13</sup> μηδεὶς λεγέτω, cf. 2<sup>8</sup>. This word is not to be too much emphasised, as if it meant "pretend," and as if doubt were seriously thrown on the man's actual possession of faith. The inadequate and empty "faith" which produces no works may be hardly worthy of the name, but it is not necessarily a deliberate hypocrisy.

The contrast is not between saying (λέγειν) and doing (ἔργα ἔχειν), as it was in 1<sup>23</sup> between hearing and doing; it is rather between mere adherence to Christianity and conduct, or between church-membership and life (πίστιν ἔχειν, ἔργα ἔχειν).

ἔργα seems here a recognised term for "good deeds." Cf. Mt. 5<sup>16</sup> 23<sup>3</sup>, Rom. 2<sup>6</sup>, Jn. 3<sup>20</sup>, Tit. 1<sup>16</sup>, etc., etc., where τὰ ἔργα means "conduct," which is made up of an infinite number of separate ἔργα. For the use of the word in moral relations, cf. Prov. 24<sup>12</sup> ὅς ἀποδίδωσιν ἐκδοτῶ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ, Ps. 62<sup>12</sup>, Apoc. Bar. 51<sup>7</sup> "saved by their works," 4 Ezra 7<sup>26</sup>, Pirke Aboth, iii, 14; iv, 15, and many other passages referred to by Spitta, pp. 72-76.

The ἔργα here do not appear as specifically ἔργα νόμου; the word merely denotes conduct as contrasted with faith. This contrast cannot be original with this writer (cf. 4 Ezra 9<sup>7</sup> 13<sup>23</sup>).

The contrast of faith and works will appear wherever faith is held to be the fundamental characteristic of the true members of the religious community, while at the same time a body of laws regulating conduct is set forth as binding. It is inevitable that by some, whether in practise or in theory, the essential underlying unity of the two absolute requirements will be overlooked and one or the other regarded as sufficient. This will always call out protests like that of James, who represents the sound and sensible view that not one only but both of these requirements must be maintained.

In the discussions of the Apostle Paul the contrast is the same in terms, but its real meaning is different and peculiar. Paul's lofty repudiation of "works" has nothing but the name in common with the attitude of those who shelter their deficiencies of conduct under the excuse of having faith. Paul's contrast was a novel one, vis. between the works of an old and abandoned system and the faith of a newly adopted one. His teaching was really intended to convey a doctrine of forgiveness.

Our author, on the other hand, with nothing either of Paul's subtlety or of his mystical insight into the act of faith and glorification of faith's contents, is led to draw the more usual contrast between the faith and works which are both deemed necessary under the same system. Hence, while faith is the same thing with both—an objective fact of the Christian life, the works of which they speak are different—in one case the conduct required by the Jewish law, in the other that demanded by Christian ethics. That the two in part coincided does not make them the same. One was an old and abandoned failure, impotent to secure the salvation which it was believed to promise, the other was the system of conduct springing from and accompanying a new life.

But this distinction, while it makes plain that James is not controverting what Paul meant, yet does not insure the full agreement of James and Paul, for Paul, although he would have heartily admitted the inadequacy of a faith which does not show itself in works, would never have admitted that justification comes ἐξ ἔργων. James has simply not learned to use Paul's theology, and betrays not the slightest comprehension of the thought of Paul about faith and the works of the Law.

The contrast between reliance on membership in the religious community and on conduct is as old as Amos and the Hebrew prophets, and comes out in the words of John the Baptist, and of Jesus in the Synoptics and John. All that James adds to these is the term "faith," to denote the essential element in the membership, and then an elaborate discussion in which the terms and instances of later Jewish theology are freely employed.

The use (see below) of the same formula which Paul seems to have created indicates that Paul had preceded James, but it is plain that James had made no study of Paul's epistles, and these formulas may have come to his knowledge without his having read Paul's writings, which, we must remember, the Book of Acts does not even mention. See Introduction, supra, pp. 35 f.

This question is presented as if it admitted of but one answer, and that a self-evident one.

15-17. Illustration from the emptiness of words of charity as a substitute for deeds.

This is not, like the closely similar verses, 2<sup>14</sup>, a concrete instance of James's contention, but a little parable; for another parable to the same purport, cf. 2<sup>26</sup>. The illustration is abruptly introduced, as in 3<sup>11</sup>, 12.

The comparison has itself a moral significance, and the same thought is found in other literature, e. g. Plautus, Epid. 116 f. nam quid te igitur rethulit beneficum esse oratione si ad rem auxilium emortuomst?

The plural after singular subjects connected by ἥ is in accord with the occasional usage of good Greek writers. See Hadley-Allen, § 608; Blass-Debrunner, § 135. Buttmann and Blass ascribe the plural here to the fact that the two nouns are of different genders, but this is not the case in all the examples from secular Greek.

ἐφήμερον τροφῆς, "food for the day," "the day's supply of food."

The word ἐφήμερος is not in the O. T., but this whole phrase is found in Diod. iii, 32; Dion. Hal. viii, 41; Aristides, xlix, ed. Dindorf, p. 537. It is an expression natural to secular Greek, and used here, much like the English "daily bread," to describe the poor person's need as urgent; cf. Philo, In Flacc. 17 πένητές ἐσμεν καὶ μόλις τὸ ἐφήμερον εἰς αὐτὰ τὰ ἀναγκαῖα πορίζων δυνάμεθα, Ps.-Plutarch, An vitios. p. 499 C προσάλτησιν ἐφηθερμαίνεσθε καὶ χορτάζεσθε. The context requires that these be taken as passive; and, indeed, in order to say "warm and feed yourselves" it would be necessary in the late usage of the N. T. to use the active with a reflexive pronoun, ὑμᾶς αὐτοῖς, ἑαυτοῖς; cf. e. g. 1<sup>23</sup> παραλογιζόμενοι ἑαυτοῖς. Cf. Blass-Debrunner, § 310.

That θερμαίνειν was commonly used of the effect of warm clothes is shown by Job 31<sup>20</sup>, Hag. 1<sup>8</sup>, but also by Plut. Quaest. conviv. vi, 6, p. 691 D, and a curious passage (quoted by Wetstein) in which Galen (De vir. medic. simpl. ii) criticises the common neglect of writers to observe the distinction between that which warms and that which merely keeps off the cold.

ἐὰν μὴ ἔχῃ ἔργα, cf. vv. 18. 20. 26 ἡ πίστις χωρὶς [τῶν] ἔργων.

Faith is said to "have" works, perhaps in the sense of "attendance or companionship" (Lex. s. v. ἔχω I, 2, c).

νεκρά, cf. v. 26. The two things which are opposed are not faith and works (as with Paul) but a living faith and a dead faith. The dead faith is also called ἀργή (v. 20); cf. 1<sup>26</sup> μάταιος. It is not denied that faith can exist without works, but it is the wrong kind of faith.

καθ' ἑαυτήν, "in itself" (R.V.), strengthens νεκρά, "inwardly dead"; not merely hindered from activity, but defective in its own power to act; see 2 Macc. 13<sup>13</sup>, Acts 28<sup>16</sup>, Rom. 14<sup>22</sup>, and secular references in Lex. s. v. κατά, II, 1, e, cf. Gen. 30<sup>40</sup> 43<sup>21</sup>.

Of the various renderings proposed the only other one deserving mention is that of Grotius and others, who give it this meaning of "by itself," "alone" (ff sola), but interpret, "faith without works is dead, being alone." This involves a tautology, and in strictness would require the addition of the participle οὔσα.

18. A possible rejoinder in behalf of the censured persons, and its refutation.

The future here "denotes a merely supposable case" (Lat. dicat), Winer, § 40, b, p. 280; Buttmann, § 139, 18; Viteau, Grec du N. T., Le verbe, § 43. Cf. Heb. 11<sup>22</sup>.

In reply to the censure upon those who rely on faith and neglect conduct, it is here suggested that one person has faith (cf. 1 Cor. 12<sup>9</sup> ἐτέρῳ πίστις ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ πνεύματι), another works, doubtless not in either case with perfect exclusiveness but in pre-eminent degree. This is a defense which suggests antinomianism, but includes a curious tolerance. While obviously weak—a weaker position, indeed, than downright antinomianism—it has a certain plausibility, and very likely fairly expresses the underlying unformulated philosophy of not a few persons.

The objector's words are contained in one sentence; then

James replies with δείξόν μοι κτλ. This sentence is evidently from the point of view of vv. 14-17, and is intended flatly and comprehensively to deny that faith and works are separate gifts, like, for instance, prophecy and healing.

σύ, κἀγώ. The pronouns do not refer to James and the objector, but are equivalent to εἰς, ἕτερος, "one," "another," and are merely a more picturesque mode of indicating two imaginary persons. Very much the same is true of "thou" and "I" in the second half of the verse, where James has no idea of emphasising his own superior uprightness.

σύ cannot be made to refer to James (1) because James is contending not for faith but for works, and (2) because James's personality has up to this point been so little prominent (the first person has been only used in the conventional address ἀδελφοί μου), that some clear indication of such a direct contrast between him and the objector would be expected, at least ἐπεὶ τις ἐμοί instead of ἐπεὶ τις.

For a similar usage cf. the quotation from Bion in a fragment of the Cynic Teles (ed. Hense<sup>2</sup>, pp. 5 f., from Stobæus, Anthol. iii, 1, 98 [Mein. v, 67]), μη οὖν βούλου δευτερολόγος ὢν τὸ πρωτολόγου πρόσωπον· εἰ δὲ μή, ἀνάγκαστόν τι ποιήσεις. σὺ μὲν ἀρχεῖς καλῶς, ἐγὼ δὲ ἀρχομαι, φησὶ (sc. ὁ Βίων), καὶ σὺ μὲν πολλῶν, ἐγὼ δὲ ἑνὸς τούτου παιδαγωγὸς γενόμενος, καὶ σὺ μὲν εὐπορος γενόμενος δίδως ἐλευθερίως, ἐγὼ δὲ λαμβάνω εὐθαρσῶς παρὰ σοῦ οὐχ ὑποκρίτων οὐδὲ ἀγεννίζων οὐδὲ μεμψιμοιρῶν.

Teles (c. 230 B.C.), quoting his predecessor Bion, is urging that every man must play the part that Fortune assigns him, and says: "If, then, you are a second-class actor, don't envy the rôle of the first-class player. If you do, you will commit blunders. You are a ruler, I am a subject (says [Bion]); you have many under you, I, as a tutor, but this one; and you grow prosperous and give generously, while I cheerfully receive from you without fawning or degrading myself or complaining."

It is to be noted that in the first sentence from Teles σύ is the man with the inferior actor's part, while in the rest of the passage σύ is the more prosperous man, in contrast to the speaker, who modestly presents himself as the representative of lesser worldly fortune. This is not unlike the way in which James (see below) fails to preserve strictly the rôles of his fragmentary dialogue.

On the "ideal" second person in Greek (equivalent to τις), see Gildersleeve, Syntax of Classical Greek, i, 1900, p. 41, with many examples.

δείξον, "show," "prove," "demonstrate," cf. Jas. 3<sup>13</sup>. Here begins the reply addressed to the objector. James replies, first, by a challenge to the objector to produce a case of faith standing by itself without accompanying works. This challenge rests on the assumption that such a "dead" faith is really no faith at all. James, however, does not pursue that aspect of the matter, but proceeds, secondly (κἀγὼ σοι δείξω), with the converse of the first challenge, in the form of an offer to show that any case of works supposed to stand by themselves without underlying faith is merely deceptive and really implies a co-existent faith.

On the form of expression, by challenge and offer, cf. Theoph. Ad Autol. i, 2 δείξόν μοι τὸν ἀνθρωπὸν σου κἀγὼ σοι δείξω τὸν θεόν μου, Epictet. i, 6<sup>43</sup> ἐγὼ σοι δείξω . . . σὺ δ' ἐμοὶ δείκνυε and other references in Bultmann, p. 33.

The interpretations of this difficult verse are very numerous and for the most part highly subtle and unsatisfactory. The interpretation presented above, which was given by Pott in Koppe's Novum Testamentum<sup>1</sup>, 1816, and by H. Bouman, Commentarius perpetuus in Jacobi epistolam, Utrecht, 1865, differs from others in taking σὺ and ἐγὼ in the defense as referring merely to two representatives of different types of religion, not to the writer of the epistle and the objector himself. Thereby one of the chief difficulties of the exegesis is overcome, namely, the difficulty that σὺ and ἐγὼ in the objection (v. 18<sup>a</sup>) do not suit well the corresponding ἐμοί, μου, and σου, σοι, in the retort of James (v. 18<sup>b</sup>). With any other mode of interpretation it seems impossible to gain a satisfactory sense from the passage.

The interpretations are divided into two main groups, according as ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ τις is taken (1) as interposing a reply in defense of the tendency censured in vv. 14-17, or (2) as introducing the reinforcement of an ally who adds his word in the same contention as that of James.

I. τις as an objector.

This interpretation (which I adopt) finds its support chiefly in the argument used above, that this is the only natural meaning of the phrase ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ τις in such a context. Under this view the words introduced by ἐπεὶ will not extend beyond ἐγὼ, v. 18<sup>a</sup>, for δείξον κτλ. is evidently spoken in the interest of James's main contention. As to how the words (18<sup>a</sup>) can express an objection, and what that objection is, opinions have been various. The first and most obvious difficulty in this view has always been that the objector seems to declare that James has faith, while the objector himself has works. That would reverse their respective parts, and the difficulty has been met in three ways.

1. Since the objection is quoted by James, σὺ is taken as if from James's point of view and ἐγὼ as if referring to James: "But someone will say, 'Thou (i. e. the representative of the class just censured) hast faith, while I (James) have works.'" This is taken either (a) as a defense of the class censured, on the ground that several types of religion are alike admissible, or (b) as an attack upon James, who is declared to have only works (which are inferior to faith), whereas the person attacked has faith, the superior quality (so Weiss). To this, under either form, (a) or (b), James replies that faith cannot exist alone.

Both these explanations are exposed to the fatal difficulty that the objection of the defender is given in direct discourse (as, e. g., in 2<sup>a</sup>) so that ἐγὼ cannot possibly refer to James; the interpretation of Weiss is exposed to the further, equally fatal, objection that it is impossible to suppose that James could have introduced, in the mouth of a here drawing a sharp contrast specifically between James and himself is to make the words amount to an attack on James. Thus this solution is exposed to the same objections as that of Weiss already discussed.

(b) Of the same violent sort is the suggestion of Spitta, followed by Hollmann, that the objection originally introduced by ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ τις has fallen out, so that originally οὐ πῶς ἐχεις constituted the first words of James's rejoinder.

But such a rejoinder, in which the writer declares that he possesses these highly prized works, would be very unnatural, to say nothing of the fact that James would not have admitted voluntarily and gratuitously that his own faith required proof. And Spitta's attempt to reconstruct the objection introduced by ἐπεὶ τις is weak ("Aus dem Fehlen gewisser Werke könne nicht geschlossen werden, der Glaube sei nicht lebendig, und die Werke, auf welche Jakobus pochte, könnten den Mangel der πῶς nicht ersetzen," p. 79).

Hollmann's attempt is equally unconvincing: "Allein da wird jemand sagen: [Was nützen Werke ohne Glauben? Ich aber habe Glauben!] Du hast Glauben und ich habe Werke? Zeige mir deinen Glauben" (in J. Weiss, Schriften des N. T. ii, 1908, p. 10).

4. The interpretation defended above is not open to any of these objections.

II. τις as an ally.

The unsatisfactoriness of the more usual of the interpretations above described has led a second group of interpreters to take the sentence introduced by ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ τις as coming not from an opponent but from a third party, who is an ally of James. The sentence οὐ πῶς ἐχεις κατὰ ἔργα ἐχω is then taken to be merely the introduction, establishing a basis for argument, while δεῖξόν μοι κατὰ contains the real gist of the utterance of τις: "Nay, someone will say, 'Thou (the person censured by James) hast, or art supposed to have, faith, while I (the ally of James now speaking) really have works; in fact thy faith (since it cannot be demonstrated by works) is not only dead but practically non-existent, while my recognized works prove that I have faith as well.'"

Where the quotation from the imaginary ally stops is less easy to determine, and that is not very important, since in most forms of this theory the point of view of the ally and of James are identical. Some make it stop with v. 18, others carry the interjected remarks on to the end of v. 22. This latter view has the great disadvantage of separating the example of Abraham from the parallel instance of Rahab.

But the natural sense of ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ τις is too clear to permit here this meaning of ἀλλὰ; and it is not justifiable to make ἔχεις equivalent to λέγεις ἔχειν. Further, the introduction of an ally, representing the same point of view, is wholly uncalled for, and cannot be accounted for on the ground either of "modesty" (Mayor) or of "dramatic vividness" (Beyschlag). It would have to be made more obvious by the context. James cannot thus boast of works, nor has he occasion to defend himself against any charge of lack of faith. This interpretation, although widely held, cannot be accepted.

2. A more plausible form of this theory, or rather an important advance upon it, is the interpretation of Zahn (Einleitung, i, § 4, note 4), based upon the view of Hofmann and Stier. Zahn accepts the view that τις is a kind of ally, but finds that the only ally that would suit the conditions is an unbelieving Jew, whose supposed words run through v. 19: "Nay, if you maintain your practices, some Jew will say, 'Thou, as a Christian, hast thy faith, and I, as a Jew, my works; but thy conduct gives the lie to thy professions of faith, whereas my conduct shows that I have all the faith a man needs. Thy vaunted faith is no more than that of the demons.'" This is concrete and has advantages over most other interpretations. But the difficulty remains that ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ τις is more naturally taken as introducing not a reinforcement of James's position, but an objection or defense of those censured. Further, in the general style of this epistle (which is not a true letter addressed to a definite body of readers) such a reference to Jewish Christian argument would have to be made more explicit and clear. And, finally, there is no evidence that faith and works were ever the accepted party cries of Jews and Christians. On the contrary, faith characterised the Jew, and not ἔργα but νόμος and περιτομή were what he claimed as his distinction, cf. Rom. 9<sup>4</sup>, Phil. 3<sup>2</sup>. And the content of faith, as indicated in v. 19, is a monotheism which Jew and Christian shared. If faith, as such, were here thought of as that which distinguishes Christian from Jew, v. 19 could not possibly have been written.

Similar is the view of E. Haupt (Studien und Kritiken, vol. lvi, 1883, p. 187), who substitutes a non-Christian moralist for the Pharisaic Jew. This is open to the same objections as Zahn's view, and to the additional one that, especially in Palestine, the defender of "mere morality" seems less appropriate in such a tract than the polemical Jew.

For criticism of various views, besides the commentaries see Holtzmann, Lehrb. d. neutest. Theologie<sup>3</sup>, 1911, ii, p. 374, note 2.

19-26. Argument from the instances of the demons and of Abraham and Rahab.

(a) v. 19. Faith by itself can be exerted by demons.

(b) vv. 20-24. In Abraham's case, faith had to be completed by works in order to secure justification.

(c) v. 25. Likewise Rahab was justified by works.

(d) v. 26. Thus faith without works is dead.

19. Faith (even the supreme faith in One God) can be exerted by demons, who are not thereby saved.

James, after refuting the excuse of the objector, proceeds with his main argument. The point made in v. 19 is in support of the original proposition of vv. 14, 17, that faith without works is dead; v. 19 is thus an argument parallel to that of vv. 15-16.

πιστεύεις. Perhaps better taken as affirmation than (Tdf. WH.) as question.

This, the existence and unity of God, is doubtless thought of as the chief element in faith, but it is going too far to represent it as including the whole of James's conception of faith. Cf. the emphasis on monotheism (with reference to Christ added) in 1 Cor. 8<sup>4</sup>, Eph. 4<sup>6</sup>, 1 Thess. 1<sup>8</sup>.

The emphasis on monotheism as the prime article of the Jewish creed is to be seen in the Shema (Deut. 6<sup>4</sup>), "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (cf. Mk. 12<sup>29</sup>), and may be illustrated from Philo, De opif. mundi, 61; De nobilitate, 5; Leg. ad Gaium, 16. See Bousset, Religion des Judentums, ch. 15.

That a strong perception of the fundamental and distinctive significance of monotheism passed over into the early church may be illustrated from Hermas, Mand. i, πρῶτον πάντων πλῆ-τευσον ὅτι εἰς ἔστιν ὁ θεός; it was not peculiar to Jewish Christians. Cf. Harnack, Mission und Ausbreitung des Christentums, Buch ii, Kap. 9.

The text of KL has probably put ὁ θεός first in order to give it a more emphatic position. As between the other two readings, that of B is less conventional (see Mayor's note, p. 100), hence more likely to be original. The parallel 4<sup>12</sup> probably exhibits the same tendency, for there also the reading of B (with P, which is here lacking) is probably right as against an emender who inserted the article.

καλῶς ποιεῖς, cf. v. 8, καλῶς ποιεῖτε. "This is good as far as it goes," perhaps said with a slight touch of irony, as in Mk. 7<sup>9</sup>.

The "shuddering awe" of demons and others before the majesty of God was a current idea, cf. Dan. 7<sup>15</sup>, Or. Man. 4, Jos. B. J. v, 10<sup>3</sup>; Justin Martyr, Dial. 49, Χριστῷ ὄν καὶ τὰ δαιμόνια φρίσσει (cf. Dial. 30 and 121), Test. Abrah., Rec. A, 16; Xen. Cyr. iv, 2<sup>18</sup>; the Orphic fragment (nos. 238, 239) found in Clem. Alex. Strom. v, 14, p. 724 P. δαίμονες ὄν φρίσσουσι; and passages quoted by Hort, ad loc.

Here the thought is of a fear which stands in contrast to the peace of salvation. A faith which brings forth only this result is barren. Cf. Deissmann, Bibelstudien, pp. 42 f., E. Tr. p. 288.

20-24. The argument from reason of v. 19 is followed by an argument from Scripture. In the great case of Abraham faith and works co-operated to secure justification.

20. θέλεις δὲ γνῶναι. Introducing this new argument: "Do you desire a proof?" Like the similar Rom. 13<sup>3</sup> (see Lietzmann, ad loc. in Handbuch zum Neuen Testament, 1906), this can be taken as an affirmative sentence with little difference of meaning.

ὦ ἄνθρωπε κενέ. This address to a single person corresponds with v. 14, v. 19, and v. 22. In v. 24 the writer falls out of the singular into the more natural but less forcible and pungent plural, perhaps because he is there giving a summary statement in conclusion. Direct address in the singular, and in harsh tone, is characteristic of the diatribe, so ὦ ταλαίπωρε, τάλας, σάνβλον, μωρέ, πονηρέ, infelix, miser, stulte; cf. Bultmann, p. 14.

κενός means "empty," i. e. "deficient," and is used here much like "fool"; cf. the Aramaic ܢܦܪܝܢ ṣand, Mt. 5<sup>22</sup>, also Paul's ἀφρων, "thou fool," 1 Cor. 15<sup>36</sup>, and ὁ ἄνθρωπος, Rom. 2<sup>1</sup> 9<sup>30</sup>. See Trench, Synonyms, § xlix, and Mayor<sup>3</sup>, p. 102. It is used as a common term of disparagement in obvious senses in Hermas, Mand. xi, passim. The strong expression is called out by James's abhorrence of this sham faith.

The view of Hilgenfeld and others, that the Apostle Paul is meant as the ἄνθρωπος κενός hardly needs to be referred to.

ἀργή, "ineffective," "barren" (R.V.), "unprofitable," "unproductive of salvation," cf. Mt. 12<sup>36</sup>, 2 Pet. 1<sup>8</sup>, Wisd. 14<sup>6</sup> (with Grimm's note); this sense is common in classical Greek, where ἀργός is connected with such words as χώρα, γῆ, χρήματα, δόρυ, χρόνος, διατριβή. Cf. νεκρός, vv. 17. 26, in much the same sense.

There is possibly a little play on words here, between χωρίς τῶν ἔργων and ἀργή (from ἀ-εργής).

The use of this phrase suggests that the writer was a Jew, but is not wholly conclusive, for the Christians held themselves to be the spiritual children of Abraham (cf. Gal. 3<sup>7</sup>, Rom. 4<sup>16</sup> 1.). Cf. 1 Cor. 10<sup>1</sup>, Clem. Rom. 31<sup>2</sup>, which were addressed to readers not of Jewish extraction.

ἐδικαιώθη. Used here as a familiar and current term substantially equivalent to σῶσαι, v. 14.

δικαιούν means "pronounce righteous," "acquit" (e. g. Ex. 23<sup>7</sup>), and hence is used of God with reference to the great assize on the day of judgment. Like σῶζειν, however (cf. Acts 2<sup>47</sup>, 1 Cor. 1<sup>21</sup>) the word was used by anticipation, as it is here in James, to refer to the present establishment of a claim to (or acceptance of the gift of) such acquittal (e. g. Lk. 18<sup>14</sup>, Rom. 8<sup>30</sup>). The meaning of the word δικαιοῦν in Paul's use does not differ from that which he found already current, although his theological doctrine of justification, which he set forth with the aid of the word, was highly original. Nor does the meaning in the present verse depart at all from the ordinary. The justification here referred to is not anything said by God in Genesis, but is the fulfilment of the promises there recorded. See Lex. s. v. δικαίωσ; HDB, "Justification"; Sanday, Romans, pp. 28-31.

Cf. Rom. 4, especially v. 3, εἰ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ ἐξ ἔργων ἐδικαιώθη, ἔχει καύχημα · ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς θεόν κτλ., Rom. 3<sup>20</sup>, 28, Gal. 2<sup>16</sup> οὐ δικαιοῦνται ἄνθρωποι ἐξ ἔργων νόμου κτλ. The contention of James corresponds to the usual Jewish view and to a somewhat superficial common sense.

Note how in Rom. 4<sup>1</sup>, as here, the case of Abraham is brought in as the great test case to which the readers' minds are likely spontaneously to turn and to which the opponent will appeal. In each case the writer has to argue against the established idea of his readers, Paul against the Jew, James against the Christian who is using the justification of Abraham as a cloak for iniquity. Hence the abruptness of the opening in both cases.

This was an ἔργον, and is here presented as the ground of Abraham's justification. See note on ἐπίστευσεν, v. 23.

That Abraham was justified and saved was of course recognised by all; that his justification depended not merely on the initial act of faith, but also on his confirmatory manifestation of this faith under trial is the contention of James. This, he thinks, becomes clear so soon as reference is made to the great incident of the sacrifice of Isaac, whereby (Gen. 22<sup>1</sup>) the vital reality of Abraham's faith was tested, and on which followed (Gen. 22<sup>15-18</sup>) a renewal of the promise. Abraham's failure to sustain this test would have shown his faith weak and doubtless have prevented his justification; thus the inference from the great representative case of Abraham to the situation of the readers themselves was unavoidable.

At the same time James's real contention in vv. <sup>20-22</sup> is not so much of the necessity of works as of the inseparability of vital faith and works. Not merely are works needed in order to perfect faith, but faith likewise aids works. This is all said in reply to the suggestion in v. <sup>18</sup> that faith and works are separable functions of the Christian life.

In this connection note the singular, βλέπεις, v. <sup>22</sup>, and contrast, v. <sup>24</sup>, ὁρᾶτε.

The article with θυσιαστήριον has reference to the well-known altar of the story (cf. Gen. 22<sup>9</sup>).

ἀναφέρειν, in the sense of "offer" (as a religious act), appears to be foreign to secular Greek (which uses προσφέρειν), and due to the LXX, where it is common, mainly as a translation for הקריב, less often for קריב. In the LXX προσφέρειν is mainly used for קריב. See Westcott's note on Heb. 7<sup>17</sup>.

θυσιαστήριον, likewise, in the sense of "altar," is not found in secular Greek writers; see Westcott, Epistle to the Hebrews, pp. 453-461.

22. ὅτι. The force of ὅτι probably runs through vv. <sup>22</sup> and <sup>23</sup>.

ἡ πίστις. The existence and efficiency of Abraham's faith (which has not previously been mentioned) is assumed, but alone it is declared not to have been adequate to secure justification.

συνήργει] N<sup>a</sup>A ff read συνεργεῖ. The weight of ff is here diminished by the fact that it also renders ἐταλαιώθη (for which there is no Greek variant) by the present tense confirmatur.

"Faith helped works, and works completed faith," sc. toward the end of justification, as v. <sup>21</sup> indicates. In this general statement the mutual relation of faith and works is made plain—the two are inseparable in a properly conducted life (cf. v. <sup>18b</sup>). It is thus hardly true to say that the whole emphasis here rests on τοῖς ἔργοις. Bengel: duo commata quorum in priore si

illud, fides, in altero operibus cum accentu pronuntiaveris, sententia liquido percipietur, qua exprimitur, quid utraque pars alteri conferat.

The change of tense (συνήργει, ἐτελειώθη) is due to the differing nature of the two words ("linear" and "punctiliar," cf. J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 108 f.).

Grimm (Lex. s. v. συνεργῶ) interprets: "Faith (was not inactive, but by cworking) caused Abraham to produce works," and this view is held by many. V. <sup>18</sup> does, indeed, suggest that James had reached this conception of the relation of faith and works as source and product, but it is not expressed in v. <sup>22</sup>, nor is it directly implied there. The persistent attempts to find it in v. <sup>22</sup> are ultimately due to Protestant commentators' interest in the doctrine of the supremacy of faith. Not the power of vital faith to produce works, but the inseparability of faith and works is James's contention throughout this passage. The argument is directed against those who would excuse lack of works by appealing to their faith; faith alone, it is declared, is ineffective for securing salvation.

That συνήργει is used in conscious contrast to ἀργή (ἀ-εργη) is commonly affirmed, but this interpretation spoils the sense. James does not mean that Abraham's faith, being accompanied by (συν-) works, was effective (-ήργει), but that faith and works co-operated.

ἐτελειώθη, "was perfected," not as if previously, before the works, it had been an imperfect kind of faith, but meaning that it "was completed" (almost "supplemented"), and so enabled to do its proper work. If, when the test came, the faith had not been matched by works, then it would have been proved to be an incomplete faith. The works showed that the faith had always been of the right kind, and so "completed" it.

Schneckenburger and many others take the opposite view, "fides theoretica imperfecta est donec accedat praxis"; but these plain people's faith was no such theologian's theory. Huther and Beyschlag think of faith as "perfected," in the sense of growing strong by exercise in works, but this is not exactly the writer's thought here. Calvin and others try to give to ἐτελειώθη the unlikely sense "was shown to be perfect." Others urge that the process was the complete development of what faith really was. The difficulties which the commentators find are due partly to dogmatic prepossession, partly to their error in supposing that James was a subtle theologian who did not write his practical maxims and swift popular arguments until he had thought out the exact definitions, psychological distinctions, and profound and elusive relations involved in the subject.

23. καὶ ἐπληρώθη. καὶ introduces the result of συνήργει καὶ ἐτελειώθη.

ἡ γράφη, viz. Gen. 15<sup>6</sup>, quoted accurately from the LXX, except that all but two of the chief Mss. have καὶ ἐπίστευσεν for ἐπίστευσεν δέ.

Paul's quotation in Rom. 4<sup>3</sup> has δέ, but so do Philo, De mut. nom. 33; Clem. Rom. 10<sup>4</sup>; Justin Martyr, Dial. 92, so that the agreement need not be significant for the relation of James to Paul. See Hatch, Essays, p. 156, where the evidence is given in full.

The passage Gen. 15<sup>6</sup> (ἐλογίσθη κτλ.) is taken as a prophecy. As such, it was really fulfilled by Abraham's conduct set forth in Gen. 22. "And so, by the addition of conduct (whereby his faith was manifested) his faith was perfected, the Scripture promise that he should be justified was fulfilled, and he was called God's friend." The same passage of Genesis is also used by Paul (Rom. 4<sup>3</sup>, Gal. 3<sup>6</sup>) as proof of his doctrine of justification by faith; James, as if in reply, points out that what he has been saying in v. 21 shows that works had to come in and perfect this faith in order to bring about the desired end of justification. ἐπίστευσεν.

In Gen. 15<sup>6</sup> the object of Abraham's faith is that God will fulfil the promise just given and grant him an heir. In 1 Macc. 2<sup>62</sup>, Ἀβραὰμ οὐκ ἐν πειρασμῷ εὐρέθη πιστός, καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ δικαιοσύνη (Codd. XV εἰς δικαιοσύνην), Gen. 15<sup>6</sup> is alluded to, and the signal exhibition of this faith in the sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. 22, note 22<sup>1</sup>) appears to be in mind. So here in James the sacrifice of Abraham is the act which manifests the faith, cf. Gen. 22<sup>16-18</sup>; and this seems to follow the ordinary Jewish understanding of the matter. In other passages of the N. T. the case is various. Rom. 4<sup>17</sup> <sup>a</sup>. refers to the belief of God's promise of a son; Heb. 11<sup>8</sup> <sup>a</sup>. to the faith shown by Abraham's departure for an unknown country; Heb. 11<sup>9</sup> to his residence in Canaan; Heb. 11<sup>17</sup> <sup>a</sup>. to the sacrifice of Isaac. Clem. Rom. 31 connects the sacrifice of Isaac with Abraham's righteousness and faith; Gen. 15<sup>6</sup> is quoted, but the precise nature of Abraham's faith is not indicated.

The same expression is found (of Phinehas) in Ps. 106<sup>30, 31</sup>; cf. Gen. 15<sup>6</sup> (with Skinner's note), Deut. 24<sup>13</sup>, "it shall be righteousness unto thee before the Lord, thy God," Deut. 6<sup>25</sup>, Prov. 27<sup>14</sup>. It means that God accounted the act (here an act of faith) to be righteous, i. e. righteous in special and distinguished measure. The developed use of δικαιοσύνη to denote the possession of God's approval on the whole, and not merely with reference to a single act, necessarily enlarged the meaning of the expression, which in the N. T. is treated as equivalent to ἐδικαιώθη.

The name of God is avoided in the LXX translation by recasting the sentence and using the passive voice ἐλογίσθη for the active verb of the Hebrew (see Dalman, Worte Jesu, i, pp. 183 ff., Eng. transl., pp. 224-226). Similarly in Ps. 106<sup>30</sup> <sup>1</sup>, 1 Macc. 2<sup>15</sup>.

This sentence, which is not to be included as a part of ἡ γραφή, is parallel to ἡ πίστις ἐτελειώθη καὶ ἐπληρώθη ἡ γραφή, "In this fact (i. e. ἐκλήθη) the promise implied in ἐλογίσθη was fulfilled." The reward was greater than in the case of the justification and salvation of ordinary men.

"Friend of God," i. e. "beloved by God," appears to have been a designation commonly applied to Abraham. So Is. 41<sup>8</sup> (Ἀβραὰμ δὲν ἡγάπησα, Aq. ἀγαπητοῦ μου, Sym. τοῦ φίλου μου); Philo, De sobr. 11, M. p. 401 (where in quoting Gen. 18<sup>17</sup> φίλου μου is substituted for παιδός μου), Jubilees 19<sup>9</sup> 30<sup>20</sup>, Test. Abraham, passim. The same idea is expressed in different language in 2 Chron. 20<sup>7</sup> (ἡγαπημένος), Dan. 3<sup>25</sup>, 4 Ezra 3<sup>14</sup>, Philo, De Abrahamo, 19 (θεοφιλής), and Abraham's love to God is emphasised in Pirke Aboth, v, 4. Among modern Arabs the common designation of Abraham is "the friend of God," el khalil Allah, or el khalil (cf. Koran, sura iv, 124), and the name is even given to Hebron, his burial-place; cf. Hughes, Dictionary of Islam, 1885, p. 269.

In view of this evidence it can only be said that Clem. Rom. 10<sup>1</sup> (Ἀβραάμ, ὁ φίλος προσαγορευθείς), 17<sup>2</sup>, Tertullian, Adv. Judæos 2, unde Abraham amicus dei deputatus? do not furnish proof of the dependence of Clement of Rome and Tertullian on James. In Iren. iv, 16<sup>2</sup>, ipse Abraham sine circumcisione et sine observatione sabbatorum, credidit deo, et reputatum est illi ad iustitiam, et amicus dei vocatus est, the similar combination of Gen. 15<sup>6</sup> and this sentence is probably a mere coincidence. See Introduction, pp. 87, 90 f.

It seems more likely that James writes here with the title already commonly applied to Abraham in mind than that he uses φίλος as merely equivalent to δικαιωθείς, as many (e. g. Spitta, pp. 82 f.) hold. Yet the repeated use in the Book of Jubilees (chs. 19, 30) of the expression "written down as a friend of God," in the sense of "having been granted salvation," and the connection in one instance (ch. 30) of this expression with the phrase, "it became righteousness to them," gives some plausibility to such a view. In any case φίλος θεοῦ ἐκλήθη and ἐδικαιώθη relate to the same act of God, whether the former is a mere equivalent of the latter or has a larger meaning.

But to assume that James was thinking of the "heavenly tablets" when he wrote ἐκλήθη is gratuitous. Jewish thought knew of other ways by which God could give a name besides inscribing it in a book.

ἐκ πίστεως μόνον, i. e. without the aid and co-operation (cf. v. 22) of works. This is a formal and conclusive reply to the question of v. 14.

It is not to be inferred that James held to a justification by works without faith. Such a misunderstanding is so abhorrent to his doctrine of the inseparability of faith and works that it does not occur to him to guard himself against it. And the idea itself would have been foreign to Jewish as well as to Christian thought. The fate of the heathen does not come into the question.

Older writers tried to soften the reference by taking πόρνη in some unnatural sense, as cook, landlady (here following Jewish guidance), or idolater; but the literal sense is the only possible one; see Lightfoot's note on Clem. Rom. 12.

In Jewish midrash of various ages Rahab was the subject of much interest. She was believed to have become a sincere proselyte, to have married Joshua, and to have been the ancestress of many priests and prophets, including Jeremiah and Ezekiel. Her faith as implied in Josh. 2<sup>11</sup> was deemed notably complete, and was said to have evoked the express recognition of God himself; and she, with certain other proselyte women, was called "the pious." See JE, "Rahab." This evidence of special Jewish attention to Rahab, although the actual rabbinical passages are some of them late, fully justifies the assumption that the references to Rahab in Hebrews and Clement of Rome are independent of this verse in James; cf. Introduction, pp. 22, 87. It is noteworthy that none of the words used to describe Rahab's conduct are the same in Hebrews and in James. Clement of Rome may, of course, here as elsewhere, be dependent on Hebrews.

ἐξ ἔργων. The works consisted in the friendly reception (ὑποδεξαμένη) and aid in escaping (ἐκβαλοῦσα) given to the spies, as described in Josh. 2. The faith to which an opponent might have pointed (cf. Heb. 11<sup>31</sup>, Clem. Rom. 12) is displayed in Rahab's words, Josh. 2<sup>9-11</sup>, especially v. 11 ὅτι κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὑμῶν θεὸς (so Cod. A) ἐν οὐρανῷ ἄνω καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς κάτω.

The choice of Abraham and Rahab as examples here is probably to be explained by observing that the one was the accepted and natural representative of faith and justification, while the other is an extreme case, where, if anywhere, James's argument might seem to fail. Notice καί, and a certain emphasis on ἡ πόρνη, "even though a harlot." These two instances thus cover the whole wide range of possibilities. This is better than the view, long ago suggested, that the mention of Rahab, a proselyte from the Gentiles, shows that the epistle was addressed to Christian communities containing Gentiles as well as Jews (Zahn, Einleitung, § 4, Eng. transl. i, p. 91).

26. Concluding statement.

ὥσπερ. The deadness of faith without works is illustrated from a dead body. With works absent, faith is no more alive than is a body without the πνεῦμα.

The comparison is sometimes said to halt, because, whereas the death of the body is caused by the departure of the spirit, the deadness of faith is not caused, but only recognised, by its failure to produce works; and it is suggested that faith, as the source of activity, could better be compared with the spirit, and works with the body. But to the mind of James faith and works co-operate to secure justification, and by works faith is kept alive. So the body and the spirit co-operate to secure continued life, and by the spirit the body is kept alive. When v. 22 is given its true meaning, the parallel is seen to be better than is often thought.

πνεύματος. This is most naturally taken of "the vital principle by which the body is animated."

A less probable interpretation takes πνεῦμα as meaning "breath," which the body is thought of as producing. This makes a more complete parallel to the relation of faith and the works which it ought to produce, but is forced. Cf. Ps. 104<sup>29</sup>, Tob. 3<sup>4</sup>; Q. Curtius Rufus, x, 19 illud scire debetis militarem sine duce turbam corpus esse sine spiritu.

II. ON THE TEACHER'S CALLING (3<sup>1-18</sup>).

CHAPTER III.

Ch. 3 relates to the Teacher and Wise Man. That the two are treated as substantially identical is significant. It is interesting to compare the directions for leaders of the Christian community given in the Pastoral Epistles or in the Didache.

The main thought in vv. 1-12 is the greater responsibility of teachers and the extremely dangerous character of the instrument which they have to use. In vv. 9-12 the noble possibilities of the tongue are presented as a motive for checking its lower propensities. This passage naturally connects itself with 1<sup>19 f.</sup> 2<sup>6</sup> 2<sup>12</sup>.

In vv. 13-18 the discussion springs from the same abhorrence of sham which gives rise to so much of ch. 1 (vv. 6-8. 22-27), and controls the thought throughout ch. 2.

1-3. Against overeagerness to be teachers; in view of the great responsibility involved, and of the difficulty of controlling the tongue.

1. μὴ πολλοὶ διδάσκαλοι γίνεσθε, "Do not many of you become teachers." πολλοί is to be regarded either as subject or as in apposition with the proper subject (in that case ὑμεῖς); διδάσκαλοι is predicate; cf. Heb. 7<sup>23</sup>.

πολλοί L by a not unusual corruption reads πολλό. This does not point to a reading πολό, and has no relation to the mistranslation of m nolite multiloqui esse (cf. Mt. 6<sup>7</sup>).

διδάσκαλος means rabbi (cf. Mt. 23<sup>8</sup>, Lk. 2<sup>46</sup>, Jn. 1<sup>38</sup> 20<sup>16</sup> 3<sup>10</sup>; see references in Lex. s. v. διδάσκαλος and ραββί), and the teachers here referred to, if in Jewish Christian churches, would naturally have occupied a place not unlike that of rabbis in the synagogues. This would apply both to the dignity of the position and to a part of the duties of the rabbis. Among Christians the term was used both for a teacher resident in a church (Acts 13<sup>1</sup>, Antioch) and for a travelling missionary (Didache 11<sup>1 f.</sup> 13<sup>2</sup> 15<sup>2</sup>). Nothing in the text indicates whether James's reference was limited to one or the other of these classes. The position of teacher was the function of a specially gifted person, not a standing office, and it was plainly possible for a man who believed himself competent for the work to put himself forward and take up the activities of a teacher. James is himself a teacher (λημψόμεθα, v. 1), and points out the moral dangers of the teacher's life, with special insistence on the liability to opinionated disputatiousness (vv. 13-18). A good concrete impression of the nature of the meetings at which they spoke may be gathered from 1 Cor. 14. The Epistle of James itself will give an idea of one of the types of early Christian "teaching." Teachers were important from the earliest times (Acts 13<sup>1</sup>, 1 Cor. 12<sup>28</sup>, Eph. 4<sup>11</sup>) and were found in the Christian churches of many lands. The references of this epistle would seem applicable in any part of the world and during any part of the period which is open for the date of the epistle.

An interesting expansion of this exhortation of James found in the first pseudo-clementine Epistle to Virgins, i, 11, is probably from Palestine or Syria in the third century, and vividly illustrates the same situation even at that late time (text in Funk, Patres apostolici, vol. ii; Eng. transl. in Ante-Nicene Fathers, Buffalo, 1886, vol. viii).

On teachers in the early church, see articles in DD.BB., and especially Harnack, Mission und Ausbreitung des Christentums, 1906, pp. 279-308; Eng. transl. 1908, i, pp. 333-366, where a great amount of interesting material is collected and discussed.

μεῖζον κρίμα, "greater condemnation"; cf. Mk. 12<sup>40</sup> (Lk. 20<sup>47</sup>) οὗτοι λήμψονται περισσότερον κρίμα, Rom. 13<sup>2</sup>. The teacher's condemnation (or, as we should say, his responsibility) is greater than that of others because having, or professing to have, clear and full knowledge of duty, he is the more bound to obey it, cf. Lk. 12<sup>47</sup> 1.

λημψόμεθα, i. e. at the last day. Notice that James includes himself as a διδάσκαλος.

The Vulgate (sumitis) and the Bohairic version have altered this to the second person.

To this warning no good earlier or Jewish parallel has been produced. The sayings about the dangers of speech apply, indeed, to the teacher, but they are in most cases of an entirely general cast.

2-12. The Hellenistic associations of the following passage, vv. 2-12, are shown in the references in the notes. The more striking parallels have been effectively put together by J. Geffcken, Kynika und Verwandtes, 1909, pp. 45-53. Geffcken thinks that James here betrays dependence on a written tract on calumny, or some such subject, which he has adapted and expanded. This is not impossible, but the infelicities in the sequence of James's thought in the passage, on which Geffcken's theory rests, are not quite sufficient to prove anything more than dependence on ideas which had been worked out for a different purpose by others, and were familiar commonplaces of popular moral preaching.

2. πολλὰ γὰρ πταίμεν ἅπαντες. This gives the reason (γάρ) for the warning of v. 1. All men stumble, and of all faults those of the tongue are the hardest to avoid. Hence the profession of teacher is the most difficult mode of life conceivable.

On the universality of sin, cf. Rom. 3<sup>9-12</sup>, 1 Jn. 1<sup>8</sup>, Eccles. 7<sup>20</sup>, Eccclus. 19<sup>16</sup>, 2 Esd. 8<sup>26</sup>, and the similar observations of Greek and Latin writers collected by Wetstein, Schneckenburger, and Mayor, e. g. Seneca, De clem. i, 6 peccavimus omnes, alii graviora alii leviora.

The besetting danger of sins of speech and of the misuse of the tongue was clearly seen and often mentioned by ancient moralists. Noteworthy O. T. passages (among many others) are Prov. 15<sup>1-4</sup>, 7. 22, 26, 28, Eccclus. 5<sup>11-61</sup> 22<sup>27</sup> 28<sup>12-28</sup>.

χαλιναγωγῆσαι, "hold in check," cf. 1<sup>26</sup> and note.

ὅλον τὸ σῶμα, i. e. the whole man. The contrast of the tongue and the body, as of a part and the whole, has led here to a mode of expression which seems to imply that sin does not exist apart from the body. But the writer shows himself to be fully aware that sin resides in the inner man, although on the whole its more conspicuous manifestations are prominently connected with the body. The body is thought of as providing the man with his organs of expression and action. It is a natural and popular, not a philosophical or theological, mode of expression. Cf. v. 6 ἐν τοῖς μέλεσιν, 4<sup>1</sup>, Rom. 8<sup>13</sup>.

3. It is with men as with horses: control their mouth and you are master of all their action.

On ιδέ, ιδού, see Moulton's Winer, pp. 318 f. note 5; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 11, note.

Of these readings ιδού (cf. 3<sup>4</sup>, 5<sup>4</sup>, 7) and the addition of γάρ may be at once rejected as emendations; the latter, however, is significant because it implies that ειδέ was understood as equivalent to ιδέ. As between ιδέ and ειδέ, the external evidence is strong for the latter, although P when it departs from KL is an excellent witness. But in this instance the variant reading is likely to be due to a misspelling and not to deliberate emendation, whereas the excellence of B's text depends solely on its freedom from emendation, not in any accuracy of spelling. In such a case "intrinsic evidence" from the sense is the only guide; and this speaks strongly for ιδέ, which is therefore to be accepted.

τῶν ἵππων. Depends on τοὺς χαλινούς, but is put first because it contains the new and emphatic idea.

χαλινός is used of the "bridle" proper (or "reins"), of the "bit," and, as perhaps here, of the whole bridle, including both. The figurative use of "bridle" in English does not extend in the same degree to "bit," and hence "bridle" (A.V., R.V.) is preferable as the English translation here.

βάλλομεν, "put," cf. Philo, De agric. 21 χαλινὸν ἐμβαλόντες; Xen. De re equest. vi, 7; ix, 9; Ael. V. h. ix, 16 ἵππῳ ἐμβάλλειν χαλινόν.

If et de is read (with WH.), καὶ has to be taken as introducing the apodosis, as often in Hebrew.

μετάγωμεν, "guide," "direct" (E.V. "turn about").

Cf. Philo, De opif. mundi, (29) 88 (the charioteers) ἢ ἂν ἐθέλωσιν αὐτὰ ἄγουσι τῶν ἡνίων ἐνείλημμένοι; Aristippus in Stobæus, Anthol. (ed. Hense), iii, ch. 17, 17 κρατεῖ ἡδονῆς οὐχ ὁ ἀπεχόμενος ἀλλ' ὁ χρώμενος μὲν μὴ παρεκφερόμενος δέ, ὥσπερ καὶ νεῶς καὶ ἵππου οὐχ ὁ μὴ χρώμενος ἀλλ' ὁ μετάγων ἔποι βούλεται.

The comparison turns on the importance which the tongue has because control over the whole creature can be exercised through it, as through the horse's mouth. The smallness of the member hardly comes into consideration here.

4-12. The dangers of the tongue.

4. καὶ τὰ πλοῖα, "ships also," like horses. The article is generic. The parallel of ship and horse is emphasised by the repetition of μετάγειν, a repetition characteristic of James, cf. 1<sup>13</sup> f. 2<sup>14</sup>. 16 2<sup>21</sup>. 25.

σκληρῶν, "harsh," "stiff"; hence here of winds, "strong"; the adjective heightens the contrast with the little rudder.

For the phrase, cf. Dio. Chrys. De regno. iii, p. 44 κλύδωνος ἀγρίου καὶ χαλεποῦ ὑπὸ ἀνέμων σκληρῶν μεταβαλλομένου, Prov. 27<sup>18</sup> σκληρὸς ἄνεμος (where the difference from the Hebrew is instructive), and other references in Wetstein, Mayor, and Schneckenburger.

ὁρμή, "impulse," "desire." Used in N. T. only here and Acts 14<sup>5</sup>, and not in this sense in O. T., but common in classical Greek writers. See Trench, § lxxxvii, and see L. and S. for full references, e. g. Xen. Anab. iii, 2<sup>9</sup> μᾶ ὁρμῇ; Plato, Phil. 35 D, where ὁρμή is parallel to ἐπιθυμία.

Others take this of the pressure of the steersman on the helm, but without any sufficient reason.

τοῦ εὐθύνοντος, "the one who directs it." Cf. Philo, De conf. ling. 23 φιλεῖ γὰρ ἔστω δτε χωρὶς ἡνιόχων τε καὶ κυβερνητῶν ὃ τε πλοῦς καὶ ὁ δρόμος εὐθύνεσθαι; also Prov. 20<sup>24</sup>, Ecclus. 37<sup>15</sup>.

The twin figures of the control of horse and of ship are frequently found together in later Greek writers, as the following passages show. In some of the instances the point of the comparison is the smallness of the instrument which controls so great a body. James is evidently acquainted with the forms of current Greek popular thought.

In the following the figures of ship and horse are characteristically combined :

Plutarch, De aud. poetis, 12, p. 33 F "Τρόπος ἐσθ' ὁ πειθὼν τοῦ λέγοντος, οὐ λόγος·" καὶ τρόπος μὲν οὖν καὶ λόγος· ἢ τρόπος διὰ λόγου, καθάπερ ἱππεὺς διὰ χαλινῶν καὶ διὰ πηδαλίου κυβερνήτης.

The often-quoted passage from Ps.-Aristotle, Mechanica, 5, is not apt, since there the rudder is mentioned not as a literary figure, but as one example of the principle of the lever.

For the figure of the horse, cf. Sophocles, Antig. 477 f.

5. μεγάλα αὐχεῖ is equivalent to μεγαλαυχεῖ, "be haughty," which has here been separated into its component parts in order to make a good parallel to μικρὸν μέλος ἐστίν. The phrase is here used in the sense not of an empty boast, but of a justified, though haughty, sense of importance; cf. Moulton and Milligan, Vocabulary of the Greek Testament, p. 94.

The usual associations, however, of μεγαλαυχεῖν are bad, as here. A boasting compatible with proper humility would probably be expressed by καυχᾶσθαι. Cf. Zeph. 3<sup>11</sup>, Ezek. 16<sup>16</sup>, Eccles. 48<sup>18</sup>, 2 Macc. 15<sup>11</sup>, 4 Macc. 2<sup>11</sup>.

ὕλην. The abundant references in ancient literature to forest fires, sometimes with direct reference to the smallness of the spark which leads to vast destruction, and the repeated use of this comparison in ethical discussions make it likely that ὕλην here means "forest" rather than "fuel."

In Homer, Il. ii, 455

ἥντε πῦρ ἀΐδηλον ἐπιφλέγει ἄσπετον ὕλην

Philo, De migr. Abr. 12, M. p. 455 σπινθήρ γὰρ καὶ ὁ βραχύτατος ἐντυφόμενος, ὅταν καταπνευσθεὶς ζωκυρηθῇ, μεγάλην ἐξάπτει πυράν.

Seneca, Controversiarum excerpta, v, 5, nesciebas quantā sit potentia ignium . . . quemadmodum totas absumat urbes, quam levibus iniliis oriuntur incendia.

Among Hebrew writers, Is. 9<sup>18</sup> 10<sup>18</sup>, Ps. 83<sup>14</sup> use the figure of a forest fire; and Ecclus. 11<sup>22</sup> uses the figure of the small spark which kindles "a heap of many coals." The tongue is compared with a fire in Ps. 120<sup>11</sup>, and in Midrash, Leviticus rabba, 16: R. Eleasar in the name of R. Jose b. Zimra: "What fires it [the tongue] kindles!" (see Schöttgen, Horae hebraicae, pp. 1021 f.). But the specific parallels make it seem plain that this comparison is drawn from a standing simile of current Greek popular philosophy.

6. καὶ ἡ γλώσσα πῦρ sc. ἐστίν. This applies the comparison made in the preceding sentence.

For the expression taken by itself "the iniquitous world" is the most probable sense. ἀδικίας is then genitive of quality, cf. 1<sup>22</sup>, 2<sup>5</sup> 2<sup>12</sup>, Lk. 16<sup>8</sup>, 9 18<sup>6</sup>, Enoch 48<sup>7</sup>, "this world of iniquity." On κόσμος, cf. Jas. 1<sup>27</sup> 2<sup>5</sup> 4<sup>4</sup>, and see note on 1<sup>27</sup>.

Other meanings have been suggested; on the history of the exegesis, see Huther's and Mayor's notes. Thus Vg translates "the whole of evil," universitas iniquitatis. But the sense "the whole" for δ κόσμος is attested only Prov. 17* ὅλος δ κόσμος τῶν χρημάτων; and, moreover, the meaning does not suit our passage well.

Another interpretation is "the ornament of iniquity." This is capable in itself of an intelligible sense, as referring to the use of rhetorical arts by designing speakers (Wetstein: malas actiones et suadet et excusat), but that seems foreign to the circle of thought in which the writer is here moving. This sense was, however, a favourite one with Greek interpreters. From Isidore of Pelusium, Epist. iv, 10, who gives it as one possible meaning, it is taken into Cramer's Catena, p. 21, and it is also found in "Œcumenius," on vv. 1-4, and in Matthäi's scholia (ἐπισκοπεῖ γὰρ ὁ ῥήμασιν ἐσθ' ὅτε ἀδικίαν).

As the text stands, κόσμος cannot easily be connected with what precedes, whether as appositive of πῦρ or as a second predicate, parallel to πῦρ and after ἐστίν understood, for neither of these constructions yields a recognisable sense. If connected with what follows, a colon being put after πῦρ instead of a comma, we get the best sense of which the passage seems capable, viz.: "The tongue stands as (i. e. represents) the unrighteous world among our members; it defiles the whole body, itself having direct connection with hell" (so E.V.). δ κόσμος is then taken as predicate after καθίσταται. So the free Latin version in the Speculum: ita et lingua ignis est: et mundus iniquitatis per linguam constat in membris nostris quae maculat totam corpus.

Even this interpretation, however, is awkward and unsatisfactory, and it is probable that the text is corrupt. The context calls for some word in place of δ κόσμος which should yield the meaning "productive of," or "the tool of," or "representative of" wickedness. The phrase would then aptly explain in what way the tongue is in fact a fire.

The Peshitto inserts ὕλη after ἀδικίας and thus makes of δ κόσμος τῆς ἀδικίας an independent sentence parallel to ἡ γλώσσα πῦρ; "the wicked world is a forest." This is a possible conjecture; it seems to rest on no Greek evidence. A simpler and better conjecture, often made, is to exclude δ κόσμος τῆς ἀδικίας from the text altogether as a gloss.

Spitta, following others, conjectures that ἡ γλώσσα πῦρ δ κόσμος τῆς ἀδικίας is all a gloss. He holds that the words were written as the title of 3<sup>1-4</sup> (which form the Euthalian chapter), and then wrongly introduced from the margin into the text, while, as a result of this interpolation the words ἡ σκιλοῦσα ἔλον τὸ σῶμα were also added. These are appropriate to the idea of δ κόσμος (cf. 1<sup>17</sup>), but not to that of a fire; and are not very naturally suggested by the idea of the tongue, breaking the forcible simplicity of the original context which Spitta thus reconstructs. Exegesis by leaving out hard phrases is an intoxicating experience.

ἡ σπιλοῦσα, "which defileth," "staineth"; justifying the preceding statement. The tongue defiles the body by lending itself to be the organ of so many sins.

Cf. 1<sup>27</sup> ἄσπιλον ἀπὸ τοῦ κόσμου, Test. XII Patr. Aser 2<sup>7</sup> [ὁ πλεονεκτῶν] τὴν ψυχὴν σπιλοῖ καὶ τὸ σῶμα λαμπρύνει.

δλον τὸ σῶμα, cf. v. 3, which is here in mind.

φλογίζουσα, "setting on fire," "kindling"; cf. v. 3 ἀνάπτει. This returns to the figure of fire and completes the interrupted application of that comparison.

σπιλοῦν and φλογίζειν are each used a very few times in the Bible, and are not common (φλογίζειν being mainly poetical) in secular Greek.

The grammarians distinguish between τρόχος, "course," and τροχός, "wheel," but in view of the derived senses of the latter word the distinction is unimportant.

γένεσις is here to be taken (cf. 1<sup>23</sup> and note) as substantially equivalent to κτίσις, "creation." As a spark can set a great forest fire, so the tongue kindles the whole world into flame. The description of nature as a "wheel" is made comprehensible by some of the parallels given below under 2 (a). Here it is used to suggest the continuousness, and so the far-reaching vastness, of the damage done, but the whole phrase is native to other contexts, and the writer's idea is not to be too precisely defined. Of course, what is actually enkindled by the tongue is mankind and human society, in which the evil results of wrong speech are manifest and universal; the actual phrase is more inclusive, but in such a rhetorical expression the exaggeration is pardonable.

For full accounts of the various commentators' guesses at the exact meaning, see Heisen, Novae hypotheses, pp. 819-880 (with great collections of illustrative material, mostly not apt); D. J. Pott, Novum Test. graece, editio Koppiana, Göttingen, 1810, vol. ix, pp. 317-329; Huther, ad loc. Much material is given in Mayor<sup>3</sup>, ad loc. pp. 114-116; Windisch, ad loc.; and Hort, St. James, pp. 72-74, 106 f. The only critical discussion of the evidence is that of Hort, whose own interpretation, however, is impossible to accept, being based on Ezek. 1<sup>18-21</sup>.

The translations are as follows:

Cf. Priscillian, ed. Schepss, p. 26 (deus) sciens demutationem firmamenti et distruens rotam geniturae reparatione baptismatis diem nostrae nativitatís evicit. The phrase rota geniturae is here used in the sense of astrological fatalism, and is equivalent to ὁ τροχὸς τῆς ἀνάγκης. The relation of m to Priscillian's text of James makes it probable that in this version of James rota geniturae was intended to have that sense, and hence geniturae substituted for an earlier nativitatís.

The interest of the phrase lies not so much in the determination of its exact meaning as in the fact that it cannot be accounted for from Jewish modes of expression and implies contact with (though not understanding of) Greek thought. It does not, however, betray knowledge of any particular system of thought (Orphic or other), or any closer contact with Hellenism on the part of the writer of the epistle than can be inferred from other ideas and expressions which he uses. This is true in spite of the occurrence in Greek writers of the exact phrase ὁ τροχὸς τῆς γενέσεως and its equivalent ὁ κύκλος τῆς γενέσεως.

The two characteristics of the wheel which mainly attracted the attention of the ancients were (1) its constant change of position and (2) its circular figure and motion. In tracing the meanings it should be noticed that "wheel" (τροχός) and "circle" (κύκλος) are frequently used with little or no distinction.

1. That any revolving motion is full of change caused the wheel to be a symbol of the changeableness of human fortune, now up, now down. Thus τροχὸς τὰ ἀνθρώπινα ἤτοι εὐμετάβολα was a proverb (Leutsch and Schneidewin, Corpus paramiographorum, ii, Göttingen, 1851, p. 87, with many references, cf. also ii, p. 223 (Macarius Chrysoc. cent. viii, 58); and from Cicero's time the wheel became a regular attribute of Fortune.

So Anacreon, iv, 7 τροχὸς ἄρματος γὰρ οἷα βίωτος τρέχει κυλισθεῖς.

Orac. sibyll. ii, 87 (Ps.-Phocyl. 27) κοινὰ πάθη πάντων· βίωτος τροχὸς· ὁσάτος ἑλβος.

Herodotus, i, 207 ὡς κύκλος τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐστὶ κρηγμάτων περιφερόμενος δὲ οὐκ ἐξ αἰεί τοὺς αὐτοὺς εὐτυχεῖν.

For other illustrations, see Gataker's notes on Marcus Aurelius, ix, 28; Mayor<sup>1</sup>, pp. 116-118; Hort, St. James, p. 107. But nothing in James (not even 1st 4th) indicates that the writer had in mind here this aspect of the "wheel of nature."

2. Another aspect of the turning of a wheel is that it goes round and round on its own axis, making no real progress and finding no given termination of its motion; or, to state the same thing from a different point of view, that its figure is circular, and so continuous, returning on itself, without beginning and without end. Hence arose various derived senses for both "wheel" and "circle." Thus the rhetoricians and grammarians speak of the "circle of the period," much as we might say the "rounded period," and of the closed "circle" of an argument; a verse beginning and ending with the same word was called a "circle," and so was a continuous series of myths (especially the "epic cycle").*

For instance, Ocellus Lucanus (neo-pythagorean), Libellus de universi natura, i, 15 (Mullach, Fragmenta philosophorum graecorum, i, p. 394), ἦ τε γὰρ τοῦ σχήματος ἰδέα κύκλος· οὗτος δὲ πάντοθεν ἴσος καὶ ὁμοῖος. διόπερ ἀναρχὸς καὶ ἀτελεύτητος.

In physiology the continual cycle of breathing in and out is described by Plato (Tim. 79 B) as οἷον τροχοῦ περιαγομένου (cf. also Galen, De placitis Hippocratis et Platonis, p. 711). More important to be considered here are the following uses:

(a) In general, "wheel" and "circle" are used of the round of human life, the cycle of successive generations which endlessly are born and disappear; and the same mode of thought was applied to the whole universe, all parts of which are subject to endless succession of formation and decay.†

κύκλος γὰρ αὐτὸς καρπῶν τε γῆς φυτοῖς, θνητῶν τε γενεᾷ· τῶν μὲν αὖξεται βίος, τῶν δὲ φθίνει τε καὶ θερίζεται πάλιν.

* See Stephanus, Thesaurus, or Liddell and Scott, s. v. κύκλος.

† Of a different order is the mechanical conception of the revolving universe, used with great ingenuity by Plato, e. g. Polit. 12-14, pp. 269-271; Leg. x, 8, p. 898.

A good statement of the same idea (but without the word κύκλος) is that of Plutarch (Consol. ad Apollonium, 10, p. 106 E) in a neighbouring context to that in which he cites the above fragment (p. 104 B). He refers to the doctrines of Heraclitus, and compares the progress of the generations—our grandparents, our parents, ourselves—to the continuous flow of a river (ὁ τῆς γενέσεως ποταμὸς οὕτως ἐνδελεχῶς ῥέων οἷοτε στήσεται), while in the opposite direction flows the corresponding river of death (καὶ πάλιν ἐξ ἐναντίας αὐτῷ ὁ τῆς φθοράς). But here the contrast of γένεσις and φθορά shows that γένεσις has its proper sense of “coming into being,” not the meaning which we have to assume for it in James.

Simplicius (c. 500 A.D.) Comm. in Epicteti enchiridion, ed. Didot, ch. 8, p. 42, uses the phrase “the endless circle of becoming” (ὠφέλιμος . . . τῷ ἀπαράντῳ τῆς γενέσεως κύκλῳ, διὰ τοῦτο ἐκ’ ἀπειρον προϊόντι, διὰ τὸ τὴν ἄλλου φθορὰν ἄλλου γένεσιν εἶναι), and similarly, ed. Didot, ch. 27, p. 76 (quoted by Hort, St. James, p. 73).*

These passages well illustrate that conception of the circle itself which is probably the basis of James’s use of τροχός, but in them γένεσις means not “nature,” in the sense of ἡ κτίσις, but “becoming,” “origination,” as the context shows. Thus the close similarity of expression to that of James turns out to be mainly accidental, and the passages are not directly available for the interpretation of the phrase in the epistle.

In accordance with this general method of thought Isidore of Pelusium († c. 440), Ep. ii, 158, interprets the phrase in James (which he misquotes τὸν τροχὸν τῆς ζωῆς) to mean “time” and says ὅτι τὸν τροχὸν τὸν χρόνον ἐκάλεσε διὰ τὸ τροχοειδὲς καὶ κυκλικὸν σχῆμα, εἰς ἑαυτὸν γὰρ ἀνελίττεται.† His general interpretation is on the right track, but the phrase in the epistle does not mean “time.”

(b) In connection with the Orphic and Pythagorean doctrine of the transmigration of souls to new bodies after death, the term “wheel,” or “circle,” was naturally used to describe the unending round of death and rebirth. Metempsychosis, which in its primitive Thracian form had been a means of gaining after death a full life, such as was inconceivable apart from a body, became for Greek religious thought a form of purifying punishment, from whose dismal cycle salvation could come only from the god and to those alone who had pursued the ascetic practises of the “Orphic life.”‡ To “cease from the Wheel and breathe again from ill” (κύκλου τ’ ἀν λήξαι καὶ ἀναπνεύσαι κακότητος, Orph. fragm. 226, Proclus, In Plat. Tim. comm. v, p. 330 B) was the goal of the religious life of the Orphic initiate, and in the ritual a wheel seems to have played a part. "The first article in the creed or confession of the Orphic soul is κύκλου δ' ἐξέπταν βαρυκενέος ἀργαλείοι, 'I have flown out of the sorrowful weary wheel.' " *

‡ See E. Rohde, Psyche, 1903, ii, pp. 121–131, 133–136, 165, note 2, 217–219 f.; Jane E. Harrison, Prolegomena (as cited below); Lobeck, Aglaophamus, 1829, ii, pp. 795–806.

This Orphic round of birth, death, reincarnation, over and over again repeated, is described as "the wheel of fate and birth" (ὁ τῆς εἰμαμένης τε καὶ γενέσεως τροχός)† and "the circle of birth" (ὁ κύκλος τῆς γενέσεως).‡ The phrase "compulsory circle" (κύκλος ἀνάγκης) is also found in a statement of the kindred transmigration doctrine attributed to Pythagoras.§ But the phrases, although almost identical with that of Jas. 3<sup>a</sup>, do not throw any light upon it. To think of the tongue as enflaming the "wheel" of metempsychosis is nonsense; and, on the other side, nothing could be more opposed to James's robust doctrine of moral responsibility than the idea of a fatalistic circle.

It is therefore impossible to draw the inference that the author of the epistle had direct contact with Orphic mysteries and ideas. The resemblance of language may well be a mere accident, and even if we suppose that he had picked up and misused a chance phrase, that would be fully accounted for by acquaintance with Cynic popular preachers, or Stoic-cynic writers of diatribes, who must have given currency to such catch-words incidentally to their satirical attacks on the ideas which the phrases conveyed.||

(c) Similar expressions are used of fatalistic necessity. So Philo, De somn. ii, 6, p. 664, κύκλον καὶ τροχὸν ἀνάγκης ἀτελευτήτου. In the magic literature are found such expressions as κύκλα τῆς ἀνάγκης; see O. Gruppe, Griech. Mythologie und Religionsgeschichte, 1906, p. 1086, note 1.

In this connection it may be observed that γένεσις in later philosophical use means "necessity" (for instances, see Clementine Recognitions, viii, 2, 4, 6, 7, etc.). But this whole field of fatalistic thought is diametrically opposed to everything that James held dear.

* The verse is from the Compagno tablet, Kaibel, Inscr. Ital. et Sicil. 641, p. 158. See Jane E. Harrison, Prolegomena to the Study of Greek Religion, Cambridge, 1903, pp. 586, 589-594, 668-671; and note the similar use of στέφανος in other verses of the same inscription.

|| See A. Dieterich, Nekyia, Leipzig, 1893, p. 141.

In any case a mere accidental coincidence seems to be involved in the fact that Simplicius's "wheel of fate and birth" is an allegorical interpretation of Ixion's wheel, and that Ixion's wheel was sometimes represented as fiery. As a rationalising interpretation of James's language, parallel to this, may be mentioned the idea of a wheel catching fire from a "hot box" at the axle, which is seriously offered by many commentators!

ὑπὸ τῆς γέεννης. Gehenna, a term elsewhere used in the N. T. only in the Synoptic Gospels, here means the place of punishment of the wicked. It was naturally associated with fire, cf. Mt. 5<sup>22</sup> 18<sup>9</sup>, Mk. 9<sup>45</sup>, and see HDB, "Gehenna." Observe the sudden intrusion of a purely Jewish idea into a notably Greek context.

7-12. The tongue is untamable; its use in blessing God gives no security against its abuse later for cursing men; this is wrong and contrary to nature.

7. γάρ, explains how the extreme statement of v. 6 is justified. The dreadful character of the tongue comes from its untamableness.

θηρίων τε καὶ πετεινῶν ἐρπετῶν τε καὶ ἐναλίων, "beasts and birds, reptiles and fishes." Cf. Deut. 4<sup>17, 18</sup>, 1 Kings 4<sup>22</sup>, Acts 10<sup>12</sup> 11<sup>6</sup>, which all, like the present passage, have more or less direct reference to Gen. 1<sup>20, 24, 26</sup>.

ἐναλίων, i. e. fishes. This word is not found elsewhere in the Bible, but is common in secular Greek, both poetry and late prose.

δαμάζεται καὶ δεδάμασται, "is from time to time, and has actually been, tamed." Cf. Schmid, Atticismus, ii, p. 276.

τῇ φύσει τῇ ἀνθρωπίνῃ. The dative is used in the sense of "in subjection to." The term itself means "human kind" (cf. L. and S. s. v. and references in Wetstein), and is used here instead of the more natural τοῖς ἀνθρώποις in order to make a little play with πᾶσα φύσις.

The control of animals by man was a familiar Hebrew observation, cf. Gen. 1<sup>28</sup> 9<sup>2</sup>, Ps. 8<sup>6-8</sup>, Eccclus. 17<sup>4</sup>; it was also a common subject of Greek and Roman comment and moralising, see references in Mayor.

8. οὐδεὶς δαμάσαι δύναται. Notice the alliteration with δ, cf. v. 5, and 4 Macc. 15<sup>31</sup>, where κ is repeated six times.

ἀνθρώπων. Belongs with οὐδεὶς; alludes to ἀνθρωπίνῃ.

This is not meant to be, as Augustine (De nat. et grat. ch. 15) and others since have thought, in contrast with the divine power which can do all things, but is a popular way of saying that complete control of the tongue is not to be expected; cf. v. 3 τέλειος ἀνὴρ.

The Pelagian interpretation, which took this as a question, in order to avoid a proof-text for universal sinfulness, is unacceptable because opposed to the context.

ἀκατάστατον κακόν, "a restless, forthputting, evil"; best taken (because of μεστή) as nominative absolute; cf. Mk. 12<sup>28</sup>. ἀκατάστατος is the opposite of δεδαμασμένος; see on 1<sup>8</sup>, and cf. 3<sup>18</sup> ἀκαταστασία. Cf. Hermas, Mand. ii, 3 πονηρὰ ἢ καταλαλιά, ἀκατάστατον δαιμόνιον ἐστίν.

ἀκατάστατον] CKL minn<sup>plur</sup> m syr<sup>sc</sup> Cyr read ἀκατάσχετον; more commonplace, hence probably an emendation.

ἰοῦ θανατηφόρου, "deadly poison," probably with allusion to the poison of the serpent's tongue. Cf. Ps. 140<sup>3</sup>, quoted in Rom. 3<sup>15</sup>. Cf. Lucian, Fugit. 19 ἰοῦ μεστὸν αὐτοῖς τὸ στόμα. The figure of poison was a common one among the Greeks, used for various hateful things (references in Mayor).

9. Continues thought of v. 8. Even good use of the tongue now gives no security against misuse later.

ἐν αὐτῇ, "by it," cf. Rom. 15<sup>6</sup>. This might be the Hebraistic instrumental ἐν (see Blass, § 41. 1, J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 11 f., 61 f., 104), but is more probably an extension of Hellenistic usage for which good parallels are found only in very late, Byzantine, writers (see Stephanus, Thesaurus, ed. Hase and Dindorf, s. v., coll. 963 f.).

This twofold use of the tongue is frequently mentioned. Philo, De decal. 19, p. 196 οὐ γὰρ δοιον, δι' οὐ στόματος τὸ ἱερῶτατον ὄνομα προφέρεται τις, διὰ τούτου φθέγγεσθαι τι τῶν αἰσχυρῶν.

was mentioned (cf. Rom. 1<sup>26</sup> 9<sup>5</sup>, 2 Cor. 11<sup>31</sup>), and to other liturgical ascriptions of praise. For the latter, cf. 2 Cor. 1<sup>3</sup>, Eph. 1<sup>3</sup>, 1 Pet. 1<sup>3</sup>, Ps. 145<sup>21</sup>, and the Shemone Esre (Schürer, GJV, § 27, Anhang).

11. ἡ πηγὴ. πηγὴ has the article as the representative of its class; see Winer, § 18. 1.

βρύει, "gush." "Send forth" (E.V.) is an exact, but prosaic, rendering of this mainly poetical word, which is not used elsewhere in O. T. or N. T. It means "teem," "be full to bursting," and is ordinarily used intransitively, with dative or genitive, of the swelling buds of plants and so, figuratively, of various kinds of fulness. Here the context shows that the thought is of the gushing forth of the water.

τὸ γλυκὺ καὶ τὸ πικρόν.

Cognate accusatives, as in Justin Martyr, Dial. 114 πέτρας . . . ζῶν ὕδωρ βρυσούσης. Mayor gives many other references, in some of which, as here, the cognate accusative occurs. γλυκὺ means "fresh," πικρόν (cf. v. 12 ἀλυκόν), "brackish." Cf. Ex. 15<sup>23-25</sup> (πικρόν, ἐγλυκάνθη), Jer. 23<sup>15</sup>.

This occurrence is prophesied as a portent in 4 Ezra 5<sup>o</sup> in dulcibus aquis salsae invenientur. "Only in the times of the End, in the days of the sinners, when all nature reverses its order and shows itself ripe for destruction, does such a phenomenon appear" (Spitta, p. 104).

12. ἀδελφοί μου. Here inserted to add emphasis, not, as more often, to mark a transition; so 1<sup>18</sup> 2<sup>6</sup>.

The fig, the olive, and the vine are the three characteristic natural products of warm countries about the Mediterranean. For the figure, cf. Mt. 7<sup>16</sup> 12<sup>33</sup>; Plutarch, De tranquill. anim. p. 472 F τὴν ἄμπελον σύκα φέρειν οὐκ ἀξιούμεν οὐδὲ τὴν ἐλαίαν βότρυς; similarly, Seneca, Ep. 87<sup>25</sup>, De ira ii, 10<sup>6</sup>; Epict. Diss. ii, 20<sup>18</sup>.

οὔτε seems to be an error for οὐδέ, but the constant interchange of these words in the Mss. by textual corruption makes it hard to be sure that good ancient writing did not exercise more freedom in the use of them than the grammarians would sanction; see Radermacher, Neutestamentliche Grammatik, p. 172.

ἀλυκόν, sc. ὕδωρ, "salt water"; i. e. a salt spring. There were salt springs or brine-pits on the shore of the Dead Sea, and the hot springs of Tiberias are described as bitter and salt; see Robinson, Biblical Researches in Palestine, 1856, ii, p. 384.

γλυκὺ ποιῆσαι ὕδωρ, sc. δύναται (as is shown by the parallel first half of the verse).

No application of these illustrations is made, and James turns abruptly to another aspect of the matter. The passage well illustrates his vividness and fertility of illustration, as well as his method of popular suggestiveness, rather than systematic development of the thought.

13-18. The true Wise Man's wisdom must be meek and peaceable; such wisdom alone comes from above, and only peaceable righteousness receives the divine reward.

13. The Wise Man must by a good life illustrate the meekness which belongs to true wisdom.

τις. For similar rhetorical questions, see Ps. 33<sup>12</sup> 107<sup>42</sup>, Is. 50<sup>10</sup>, Eccclus. 6<sup>34</sup>, etc. These short interrogative sentences (frequent in Paul) are characteristic of the diatribe; Bultmann, pp. 14 ff.

It is not necessary here, although it would be possible, to take τις in the sense of οστις. See Buttman, § 139 (Thayer's translation, p. 252); Blass, § 50. 5; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 93; Winer, § 25. 1.

σοφός. The technical term for the Teacher (cf. v. 1); in Jewish usage one who has a knowledge of practical moral wisdom, resting on a knowledge of God. The words of James relate to the ideal to be maintained by a professional Wise Man and Teacher, not merely to the private wisdom of the layman.

ἐπιστήμων, "understanding," with a certain tone of superiority, like our "expert." Cf. Eccclus. prol., Dan. 1<sup>4</sup> νεανίσκου . . . ἐπιστήμονας ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ.

δείξάτω ἐκ τῆς καλῆς ἀναστροφῆς τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ ἐν πραύτητι σοφίας, "let him by his good life show that his works have been done in the meekness appropriate to wisdom."

The relation of the parts of the sentence must be interpreted by the aid of 2<sup>18</sup>, δείξω ἐκ τῶν ἔργων μου τὴν πίστιν. The wise Man is here called on to prove not (as many commentators suppose) his wisdom (which would require δείξάτω τὴν σοφίαν), but his meekness. For Jewish examples of the tendency of learned discussion to excite passion, see J. Friedmann, Der gesellschaftliche Verkehr und die Umgangsformeln in talmudischer Zeit, 1914, pp. 58 f.

It is better to take ἐν πραύτητι σοφίας in this way than as if it were used in deprecation of the possible ostentation implied in δείξάτω ("Let him point to his good works, but let him do so with due meekness such as befits wisdom"). This would have to be indicated more clearly, as by inserting ἀλλά before ἐν.

The reason for rejecting the (at first sight simpler) interpretation, "Let him prove his wisdom by his good life" (Clem. Rom. 38<sup>1</sup> ὁ σοφὸς ἐνδείκνυσθω τὴν σοφίαν αὐτοῦ μὴ ἐν λόγοις ἀλλ' ἐν ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς), which many commentators have adopted, has been indicated above. It does not do justice to the text of v. 13 and does not give to "meekness" the emphasis that is needed in order to prepare for v. 14.

ἐν πραύτητι, cf. 131 (of the hearer, as here of the teacher).

"Meekness" is the opposite of arrogance and of the qualities referred to in v. 14; see Trench, Synonyms, § lxii. Pirke Aboth, iv, 11, "He that is arrogant in decision is foolish, wicked, and puffed up in spirit," is a maxim which refers to this besetting danger of rabbis; see Taylor's Sayings of the Fathers<sup>2</sup>, p. 69, notes 13 and 14, with quotation from R. Jonah, and cf. Pirke Aboth, iv, 12, 14.

14. And if your heart enkindle with fierce, obstinate, and divisive zeal for your own views, do not let such passion come to expression.

δέ, "and," in continuation of v. 13, not in contrast.

WH.'s period before αὶ δέ is too strong a punctuation; a colon is sufficient.

ζῆλον πικρόν, "harsh zeal." Because of ἐριθίαν this meaning for ζῆλον is better than the meaning "jealousy" (in the ordinary sense of personal jealousy), and corresponds well to the general thought. The idea is of a fierce desire to promote one's own opinion to the exclusion of those of others.

This sense of "fanatical zeal" (as distinguished from "emulation" and "jealousy") is not wholly foreign to Greek usage, but has been made specially common by the influence of the LXX, where ζῆλος stands in all cases for πικρῶς, "jealous devotion to a cause," "fanatical ardour," as ζηλοῦν does in nearly all cases for the verb πικρῶς.

In secular use ζῆλος generally means "heat," as expressed in "emulation," "rivalry"—whether good or bad; see below, note on 4<sup>1</sup>. The Biblical sense brings it near to the Hellenic σπουδή, which, starting from another side ("haste," "exertion"), acquired a wide range of meanings including "zeal" and "rivalry."

ἐριθίαν, "selfish ambition." The word denotes the inclination to use unworthy and divisive means for promoting one's own views or interests, cf. Rom. 2<sup>8</sup>, 2 Cor. 12<sup>20</sup>, Gal. 5<sup>20</sup> (and Lightfoot's note), and references in Mayor, together with Hort's valuable note, ad loc. pp. 81-83; "ἐριθία really means the vice of a leader of a party created for his own pride: it is partly ambition, partly rivalry" (Hort).

ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν has a certain emphasis, in contrast with κατακαυχᾶσθε. The meaning is: "If you have these qualities in your heart, do not let them come to expression."

μὴ κατακαυχᾶσθε (sc. τῶν ἄλλων) καὶ ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας. "Do not boast and be arrogant, and thus prove false to the Truth." That would be the natural fruit of the spirit of ζήλος and ἐριθία in the heart; and it must be suppressed. κατακαυχᾶσθε (cf. note on 2<sup>18</sup>) seems here to relate to the browbeating on the part of the Wise Man who haughtily forces his own views on others.

Others connect μὴ κατακαυχᾶσθε directly with κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας, see Winer, § 54. 5, note (Thayer's transl. p. 470, note 3). The sense then would be: "Do not boast over, and lie against, the truth." But the idea of "boasting over (or against) the truth" is out of place in the context, and is itself unnatural. κατακαυχᾶσθαι κατὰ τινος is a construction which nowhere occurs.

καὶ ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας. "And thus play false against the truth," i. e. by your conduct (κατακαυχᾶσθαι) prove false to, and belie, the truth which you as a Wise Man profess to have and utter.

Cf. 4 Macc. 5<sup>14</sup> οὐ ψεύσομαι σε, παιδευτὰ νόμι, 13<sup>18</sup>; see L. and S. s. v. for examples of ψεύδομαι with accusative, meaning "prove false to" an oath, a treaty, a marriage, an alliance, a threat, a promise.

See also Zahn, GnK, i, p. 792, note, and J. Weiss, Der erste Korintherbrief, p. 354, note, for examples of καταψεύδεσθαι, "speak falsely to the injury of someone."

τῆς ἀληθείας. Cf. 1<sup>18</sup> λόγῳ ἀληθείας, 5<sup>19</sup> πλανηθῇ ἀπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας. This means the Christian truth which the Wise Man knows—truth of both practical morals and religion. See the fuller discussion in the note on 5<sup>19</sup>. The conduct here censured is contrary to and forbidden by this truth; hence, if the Wise Man is guilty of that conduct, he is false to the truth of which he is the representative.

If the phrase ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας stood alone, a simpler interpretation would perhaps be "do not lie, violating the truth" (cf. Ecclus. 4<sup>11</sup> μὴ ἀντιλεγε τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, Test. XII Patr. Gad 5<sup>1</sup> λαλῶν κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας), but that would be alien to the context here, and it is in itself not wholly acceptable since it makes κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας a mere redundancy.

μὴ κατακαυχᾶσθε καὶ ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας] § syro<sup>ss</sup> read μὴ κατακαυχᾶσθε [§ + κατὰ] τῆς ἀληθείας καὶ ψεύδεσθε. Doubtless an emendation due to the apparent incompleteness of κατακαυχᾶσθε alone.

15. αὕτη ἡ σοφία, "that wisdom," i. e. the professed wisdom which is accompanied by ζήλος πικρός, ἐριθία, κατακαύχησις, and lacks πραΐτης.

ἐπίγειος seems to mean here "derived from the frail and finite world of human life and affairs." Cf. Philo's contrast of οὐράνιος and γήινος, Leg. all. i, 12, and the far-reaching dualism on which it rests.

Cf. Rev. 8<sup>6</sup> (ψυχή of animals). See Philo, Leg. all. ii, 7 and 13, Quis rer. div. her. 11, and E. Hatch, Essays, p. 124, cf. pp. 115-120.

The word was intelligible and familiar in this sense to Paul's readers, and does not imply later gnostic usage; see J. Weiss, Der erste Korintherbrief, 1910, pp. 69 f., 371-373; R. Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen, 1910, pp. 42-47, 109, 112, 151 f.

The curious resemblance to the gnostic designation of the two lower grades of men as χοϊκοί and ψυχικοί is probably not significant. Yet see Pfeiderer, Urchristentum<sup>1</sup>, ii, p. 546. Useful references will be found in Mayor.

δαιμονιώδης, "resembling," or "pertaining to" ("proceeding from"), an evil spirit, cf. 2<sup>19</sup>, 1 Tim. 4<sup>1</sup>. This word has been pointed out elsewhere only Sym., Ps. 91<sup>6</sup>, and Schol. on Aristophanes, Ran. 293, φάντασμα δαιμονιώδες ὑπὸ Ἐκάτης ἐμπέμπόμενον.

These three words, "earthly, sensual, devilish," describe the so-called wisdom, which is not of divine origin, in an advancing series—as pertaining to the earth, not to the world above; to mere nature, not to the Spirit; and to the hostile spirits of evil, instead of to God. Hermas, Mand. ix, 11, xi, 8, show a variety of resemblances to this passage of James, but there is no evidence of literary dependence.

The church speedily and permanently used this conception of Satanic origin to account for the gnostic "wisdom"; cf. e. g. Justin, Apol. i, §8. In James, however, it is not the substance, but the temper, of the "wisdom" that makes it false. James is not attacking systems of false teaching. See Weinel, Wirkungen des Geistes und der Geiste, pp. 13 f., 16-18, 20 ff.

16. γάρ. Introduces proof that v. 15 is true. "For such a temper, even on the part of one who claims to be a Wise Man, leads to every evil."

The word seems to have something of the bad associations of our word "anarchy," and has to bear much weight in this sentence. Cf. Prov. 26<sup>18</sup>, 1 Cor. 14<sup>18</sup>, 2 Cor. 12<sup>20</sup> ζήλος, ἐριθίαί, καταστασάι; and the similar list of evils, Gal. 5<sup>20</sup>, which has ζῆλος, ἐριθία, διχοστασάι; Lk. 21<sup>8</sup>, Clem. Rom. 1<sup>2</sup>. See Hatch, Essays, p. 4: "The political circumstances of Greece and the East after the death of Alexander had developed the idea of political instability, and with it the word ἀκαταστασία, Polyb. 1. 70. 1."

φαῦλον, "vile," see Trench, Synonyms, § lxxiv. φαῦλος is found only ten times in the LXX, five instances being in Proverbs, the others in Job, Ecclesiasticus, and 4 Maccabees.

17. Cf. Wisd. 7<sup>22-25</sup>.

πρῶτον μὲν ἀγνή, "first pure," i. e. "undefiled," free from any faults such as the ζῆλος and ἐριθία above mentioned. Nothing which shows itself as half-good, half-bad, can be accounted wisdom, Wisd. 7<sup>25</sup>.

See Trench, § lxxviii and references in Lex. s. v. ἅγιος. Cf. Phil. 4<sup>8</sup>, 1 Pet. 3<sup>1</sup>. In the LXX ἀγνός is found eleven times, of which four instances are in Proverbs and four in 4 Maccabees. See Moulton and Milligan, Vocabulary of the Greek Testament, p. 5.

ἐπιεικής, "reasonable," "considerate," "moderate," "gentle" (E.V.). See Trench, Synonyms, § xliii: "We have no words in English which are full equivalents of the Greek." See Lightfoot on Phil. 4<sup>5</sup>, and Mayor's note, p. 131.

ἀδιάκριτος, "undivided," i. e. unwavering, whole-hearted, with reference to the evil situation described in vv. 9-10.

Cf. 1<sup>9</sup> ὁ διακρινόμενος, 2<sup>4</sup> διεκρίθητε. Only here in N. T.; in O. T. cf. Prov. 25<sup>1</sup> (ἀδιάκριτοι), and there the sense is doubtful. See Ign. Trall. 1<sup>1</sup> ἀμωμον διάνοιαν καὶ ἀδιάκριτον ἐν ὑπομονῇ ἔργων ὁμᾶς ἔχοντας, Rom. inscr., Philad. inscr., Magn. 15; Clem. Alex. Pæd. ii, 3, p. 190 ἀδιακρίτω πίστει.

The Latin translations (Vg. non judicans; Cod. Corb. sine dijudicatione) seem to have missed the meaning of this word, as have many interpreters. Thus Luther translates "unpartheiisch"; so A.V., R.V. mg. "without partiality."

In O. T. only Wisd. 5<sup>18</sup> 18<sup>18</sup>; in N. T. Rom. 12<sup>9</sup>, 2 Cor. 6<sup>4</sup>, 1 Tim. 1<sup>4</sup>, 2 Tim. 1<sup>4</sup>, 1 Pet. 1<sup>22</sup>, in sense of "sincere." Elsewhere only as adverb (ἀνυποκρίτως), e. g. 2 Clem. Rom. 12<sup>4</sup>.

These characteristics of true wisdom are selected in pointed opposition to the self-assertive, quarrelsome spirit characteristic of the other sort. Apart from the fundamental ἀγνή they fall into three groups:

εἰρηνική, ἐπιεικής, εὐπειθής •
μεστή ἐλέους καὶ καρπῶν ἀγαθῶν • ἀδιάκριτος, ἀνυπόκριτος.

18. καρπὸς δικαιοσύνης, "the fruit of righteousness," i. e. the reward which righteous conduct brings, cf. Heb. 12<sup>11</sup> καρπὸν εἰρηνικῶν δικαιοσύνης, Phil. 1<sup>11</sup> πεπληρωμένοι καρπὸν δικαιοσύνης.

That the expression "fruit of righteousness" has the sense "product of righteousness" is shown by those O. T. passages which seem to have given it its currency, and in which it is used with a variety of applications. Cf. Prov. 3<sup>9</sup> (LXX), 11<sup>30</sup> ἐκ καρποῦ δικαιοσύνης φύσεται δένδρον ζωῆς, i. e. "righteousness brings long life," 13<sup>4</sup> (LXX), Amos 6<sup>12</sup>. In all these cases δικαιοσύνης indicates the source of the "fruit." Similarly Is. 32<sup>17</sup>: "And the work of righteousness (τὰ ἔργα τῆς δικαιοσύνης) shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and confidence forever." For the figure of sowing, cf. Prov. 11<sup>31</sup> (LXX), ὁ δὲ σπείρων δικαιοσύνην λήμψεται μισθόν, Hos. 10<sup>13</sup>, Job 4<sup>1</sup>, Test. XII Patr. Levi, 13<sup>4</sup>, etc.

ἐν εἰρήνῃ σπείρεται, "sown in peace," and in peace only; i. e. a righteousness capable of gaining its due reward must be peaceable; cf. 1<sup>30</sup>. The sower is, of course, the righteous man.

For the slightly inaccurate expression "sow the fruit, or crop" (instead of the seed), cf. Apoc. Bar. 32<sup>1</sup>, "Sow the fruits of the law," Plutarch, De vitando esse alieno, 4 σπείροντες οὐχ ἡμῶν καρπὸν, Antiphanes, Fab. inc. iv, 4 σπείρειν καρπὸν χάριτος.

To "do peace" (cf. Eph. 2<sup>15</sup>, Col. 1<sup>30</sup> εἰρηνοποιέω; Mt. 5<sup>9</sup> εἰρηνοποιός) means not merely to conciliate opponents, but to act peaceably. It is the complete opposite of ζήλος and ἐριθία.

The interpretation of v. 18 here given may be paraphrased, with a change of figure, thus: "The foundation which righteousness lays for eternal life can be laid only in peace and by those who practise peace." This is equivalent to saying that righteousness includes peaceableness.

Another common interpretation takes καρπὸς δικαιοσύνης as meaning "the fruit which consists in righteousness." The source will then be the true wisdom, of which righteousness is the product. The evidence for this would be Heb. 12<sup>11</sup>, where righteousness seems to be itself the fruit, and the parallelism of Jas. 3<sup>18</sup>, where the product of ζήλος and ἐριθία is said to be ἀκαταστασία and πᾶν φαῦλον πρᾶγμα. Phil. 1<sup>11</sup>, to which appeal is often made, is ambiguous, and cannot be taken as meaning that righteousness is the fruit except by giving to δικαιοσύνη its peculiar Pauline sense.

But the O. T. passages referred to above create a strong presumption against this interpretation; the simple meaning of the phrase speaks against it; and, further, righteousness is more naturally thought of (apart from Pauline theology) as the condition of receiving divine reward, not as the reward itself. The general drift of the verse would be the same under either interpretation.

III. WORLDLINESS AND THE CHRISTIAN CONDUCT OF LIFE CONTRASTED (4<sup>1</sup>-5<sup>20</sup>).

CHAPTER IV.

1-12. The cause of the crying evils of life is the pursuit of pleasure, an aim which is in direct rivalry with God and abhorrent to him.

1-2<sup>b</sup>. Quarrels and conflicts are due to the struggle for pleasure and for the means of pleasure.

The paragraph is written not so much to censure the quarrels as to set forth the evil results of aiming at pleasure; in nowise is it introduced in order merely to give an abstract analysis (πρόθεν) of the ultimate source of the quarrelling.

Some have taken 4<sup>18</sup> of difficulties between the teachers (cf. 1<sup>12-11</sup> 3<sup>14</sup>), but this is not indicated in the text, and is an unnatural limitation.

We have here, doubtless, a glimpse of the particular communities with which the writer was acquainted, but the exhortation assumes that all communities show substantially the same characteristics. The addition of ἐν ὑμῖν, v. 1, recalls the thought from the ideal pictures in the preceding verse to the actual situation in the world—and even in the Christian church. Cf. Philo, De gig. 11: "For consider the continual war which prevails among men even in time of peace (τὸν ἐν εἰρήνῃ συνεχῇ πόλεμον ἀνθρώπων), and which exists not merely between nations and countries and cities, but also between private houses, or, I might rather say, is present with every individual man; observe the unspeakable raging storm in men's souls that is excited by the violent rush of the affairs of life; and you may well wonder whether any one can enjoy tranquillity in such a storm, and maintain calm amid the surge of this bellowing sea."

πόλεμοι, "feuds," "quarrels"; μάχαι, "conflicts," "contentions." The two words cover the chronic and the acute hostilities in the community.

πόλεμος and μάχη are so frequently combined in Homer as to elicit comment from Eustathius more than once. See especially Eustathius on Il. i, 177. In later writers they became a standing combination; see references in Wetstein, e. g. Epict. Diss. iii, 13<sup>9</sup>. Hence the combined phrase is naturally used here with no great distinction between the two terms.

τῶν στρατευομένων ἐν τοῖς μελεσιν, "which are at war with one another, having their seat in your bodily members," and which so bring about conflicts among you. The war is between pleasures which have their seat in the bodies of several persons, not between conflicting pleasures throwing an individual into a state of internal strife and confusion. Since the pleasures clash, the persons who take them as their supreme aim are necessarily brought into conflict. στρατευομένων makes the connection between ἡδοναί and πόλεμοι.

By some interpreters the warfare is thought of as merely directed toward the winning of gratification, by still others as a war against the soul (1 Pet. 2<sup>11</sup>), or against the νοῦς (Rom. 7<sup>11</sup>; see passages from Philo cited by Spitta, p. 113, note), or against God. But it is entirely fitting, and makes much better sense, to understand it, as above, with reference to the natural activity of pleasures—necessarily conflicting with one another, and so leading to the outbreak of conflict. The point of James's attack is pleasure as such, not lower physical pleasure as distinguished from higher forms of enjoyment. The passage from Plato, Phaedo, p. 66, often cited, and given below (p. 258), is therefore not an apt illustration here.

Philo, De frat. et ras. 3 καταπερόνηκεν ἡδονῶν καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν, 4 Macc. 1<sup>22</sup> πρὸς μὲν οὖν τῆς ἡδονῆς ἐστὶν ἐπιθυμία, 5<sup>11</sup>; Stobæus, ii, 7, 10 (ed. Wachsmuth, p. 88) ἡδονὴν μὲν [ἐπιγίγνωσθαι] ὅταν τυγχάνωμεν ὧν ἐπιθυμοῦμεν ἢ ἐκρύγωμεν ἃ ἐφοβούμεθα. The underlying conception is the same as in Jas. 1<sup>14</sup>, although no explicit reference to ἡδονή is there made.

On ἐν τοῖς μέλεσιν, cf. 3<sup>6</sup>. James thinks of pleasure as primarily pertaining to the body. Cf. the frequent use of "members" for "body," Rom. 6<sup>13</sup>, 19 7<sup>5</sup>, 22, Col. 3<sup>5</sup>, Apoc. Bar. 83<sup>2</sup>.

The resemblance to 1 Pet. 2<sup>11</sup> is probably accidental; nor is there probably any direct allusion to Rom. 7<sup>11</sup>.

2. V. 2 explains in detail the connection between ἡδοναὶ καὶ πόλεμοι καὶ μάχαι. Ungratified desire leads to φόνος; zeal for pleasure unable to reach its end, to μάχη and πόλεμος.

οὐκ ἔχετε δὲ διὰ] minn. So Textus Receptus.

The short reading is probably original.

Under the reading adopted, the last clause, οὐκ ἔχετε διὰ τὸ μὴ αἰτεῖσθαι ὑμᾶς, belongs with v. 1 (so WH.). R. Stephen's verse-division, which connects v. 10 with the preceding instead of the following, and the punctuation of the A.V. are due to the Textus Receptus.

ἐπιθυμεῖτε, καὶ οὐκ ἔχετε· φονεύετε. καὶ ζηλοῦτε, καὶ οὐ δύνασθε ἐπιτυχεῖν· μάχεσθε καὶ πολεμεῖτε.

This punctuation alone (so WH. mg. and many commentators) preserves the perfect parallelism between the two series of verbs, which is fatally marred by the usual punctuation (φονεύετε καὶ ζηλοῦτε, καὶ οὐ δύνασθε ἐπιτυχεῖν, so Tisch. WH. etc.). The abruptness is then not greater than in 2<sup>17</sup> 5<sup>6</sup>, 13<sup>1</sup>. For the asyndeton, cf. 2<sup>22</sup>, 24. These passages mark the extreme of the abruptness which in various forms is a quality of James's style. The usual punctuation is made additionally unacceptable by the impossible anticlimax φονεύετε καὶ ζηλοῦτε (cf. Plato, Menex. (242 A).

ἐπιθυμεῖτε, not a new idea but necessarily suggested by ἡδονῶν (v. 1). Pleasure and desire are correlative; see on v. 1. φονεύετε, "kill," "murder." No weaker sense is possible, and none is here necessary, for James is not describing the condition of any special community, but is analysing the result of choosing pleasure instead of God. The final issue of the false choice is flagrant crime. ἡδονή implies ἐπιθυμία; ἐπιθυμία is often unsatisfied; in such a case its outcome, if unrestrained, is to cause the murder of the man who stands in its way.

ἐπιθυμεῖτε, ἔχετε, φονεύετε are practically equivalent to a conditional sentence, in which ἐπιθυμεῖτε καὶ οὐκ ἔχετε forms the protasis, φονεύετε the apodosis; cf. 3<sup>13</sup> 5<sup>13 f.</sup>, Bultmann, pp. 14 f. In the use of the second person plural the writer is taking the readers as representative of the world of men in general.

On the "universal," or "gnomic," present, see Gildersleeve, Syntax of Classical Greek, i, § 190; Winer, § 40. 2. a; on asyndetic sentences of the nature of a condition, cf. Buttman, § 139. 28; Winer, § 60. 4. c.

The same idea that murder is the horrible outcome to be expected from actually existing conditions, unless their natural tendency is somehow checked, is found in Didache 3<sup>a</sup> μὴ γίνου ὀργίλος· ὁδηγεῖ γὰρ ἡ ὀργὴ πρὸς τὸν φόνον· μηδὲ ζηλωτὴς μηδὲ ἐριστικὸς μηδὲ θυμικὸς· ἐκ γὰρ τούτων ἀπάντων φόνοι γεννῶνται; cf. also Clem. Rom. 4<sup>1</sup>, quoted below, Test. XII Patr. Sim. 3<sup>a</sup> πάντοτε [ὁ φθόνος] ὑποβάλλει ἀνελπεῖν τὸν φθονούμενον. It must not be forgotten that to cause a death indirectly is often called murder, and that even downright murders have not been unknown in otherwise respectable communities. Cf. Acts 9<sup>22</sup> 20<sup>a</sup> 23<sup>12 ff.</sup>, Jas. 5<sup>a</sup> ἐφονεύσατε, 1 Pet. 4<sup>11</sup> φονεύς, Ecclus. 34<sup>11</sup>.

Having established the connection between ἡδονή and φόνος, the writer presents another chain, still hypothetical and general, but showing that the origin of the prevailing state of πόλεμοι καὶ μάχαι (v.<sup>1</sup>) is ζήλος, which when it cannot attain its coveted prize regularly leads to fighting and strife.

James, writing to no one community, but to the whole Christian world, is speaking of general tendencies, not of the sins of any particular local group. Hence his strong language has no personal sting.

The underlying principle is not the same as that of Mt. 5<sup>1 f.</sup>, although there is obvious resemblance. There, as in Mt. 5<sup>11</sup>, the point is that it is the inner passion of the heart which God considers, not merely the carrying out of an angry thought in murder. Here in James the wickedness and dangerousness of the end sought, vis. pleasure, is exposed by showing to what an awful issue, if uninhibited, it surely leads.

1 Jn. 3<sup>11</sup> πᾶς ὁ μισῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἀνθρωποκτόνος ἐστίν comes nearer, but is still different.

To the mistaken idea that James is here giving a description of the particular communities which he addressed is due the conjecture φθονεῖτε for φονεύετε, which was printed in the second edition of Erasmus (1519), was supported by Calvin, translated by Luther (ihn hasset), and has been adopted by many other commentators, both older and more recent. Various other instances of the textual corruption, φόνος for φθόνος, can, indeed, be adduced (see Mayor<sup>4</sup>, p. 136); but there is no manuscript evidence for the reading here. The conjecture is unnecessary, and it obliterates the careful parallelism of the two series.

Interpreters who have been unwilling to emend the text, and yet have felt bound to see in φονεύετε an actual description of the Christian community addressed, have been driven to various expedients. The more usual methods have been either to reduce the meaning of φονεύετε to "hate," or else to assume an hendiadys, by which "murder and envy" becomes "murderously envy" (Schneckenburger: ad necem usque invidetis). Both methods are linguistically impossible.

ζήλος and ζηλῶ start with the fundamental meaning of "hot emotion." For the peculiar Hebraistic and Biblical meaning "zeal," see note on Jas. 3<sup>14</sup>. In secular use the meanings are developed on two sides, desire to surpass ("emulation," "rivalry") and desire to possess ("envy," etc.). In either sense the words may refer, according to circumstances, to either a good or an evil desire. See Trench, Synonyms, § xxvi.

In our verse ἐπιτυχεῖν shows that the desire is for possession; but ζηλοῦτε may then mean either "envy" (the possessor) or "covet" (his possessions). "Covet" (so R.V.; A.V. "desire to have"), as being the more general idea and a better parallel to ἐπιθυμεῖτε, is to be preferred.

The English word "jealousy" is derived from ζήλος through French jealousie, Latin zelus, but in most of its meanings "jealousy" corresponds rather to φθόνος, the "begrudging" to another, indicating primarily not the desire to possess, but the unwillingness that another should have.

μάχεσθε καὶ πολεμεῖτε, i. e. against those who possess what you wish to take from them. The connection of either barren envy or ungratified covetousness with strife is so natural that it hardly needs to be illustrated; but cf. Clem. Rom. 3-6 (where the Biblical and secular meanings are not distinguished), with Lightfoot's note on 3<sup>2</sup>, Philo, De decal. 28; Iren. iv, 18<sup>2</sup>.

This passage is made more intelligible by passages from Greek and Roman writers, which show that not only the connection of pleasure and desire, but that of desire, conflict, and war, was a commonplace of popular moralising in the Hellenistic age. See Zeller, Die Philosophie der Griechen<sup>4</sup>, iii, 1, pp. 221-225.

Thus Philo, De decal. 28, M. pp. 204 f.: "Last of all he forbids desire (ἐπιθυμίαν), knowing desire (τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν) to be productive of revolution and addicted to plots. For all the passions of the soul (τὰ ψυχῆς πάθη) are bad, exciting it and agitating it unnaturally, and destroying its health, but worst of all is desire. . . . The evils of which the love of money or of a woman or of glory or of any other of those things that produce pleasure is the cause—are they small and ordinary? Is it not because of this passion that relationships are broken, and thus natural good-will changed into desperate enmity? that great and populous countries are desolated by domestic dissensions? and land and sea filled with novel disasters by naval battles and land campaigns? For the wars famous in tragedy, which Greeks and barbarians have fought with one another and among themselves, have all flowed from one source: desire (ἐπιθυμία) either for money or glory or pleasure. Over these things the human race goes mad."

Ibid. 32, M. p. 208 πᾶμκτον δὲ [i. e. the fifth commandment of the second table] τὸ ἀνείργον τὴν τῶν ἀδικημάτων πηγὴν, ἐπιθυμίαν, ἀφ' ἧς ῥέουσιν αἱ παρανομώταται πράξεις, ἴδιαι καὶ κοιναί, μικραὶ καὶ μεγάλαι, ἱεραὶ καὶ βέβηλοι, περὶ τε σώματα καὶ ψυχὰς καὶ τὰ λεγόμενα ἐκτός· διαφεύγει γὰρ οὐδέν, ὥς καὶ πρότερον ἔλεχθη, τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, ἀλλ' ὅσα φθλὺς ἐν ὕλῃ νέμεται δαπανῶσα πάντα καὶ φθείρουσα.

Philo, De Josepho, 11, M. p. 50; De posteritate Cain. i, 34, M. pp. 247 f.; De migratione Abr. 12; Lucian, Cynic. 15, πάντα γὰρ τὰ κακὰ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἐκ τῆς τούτων ἐπιθυμίας φθόνται, καὶ στάσεις καὶ πόλεμοι καὶ ἐπιβουλαὶ καὶ σφαγαί. ταυτὶ πάντα πηγὴν ἔχει τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν τοῦ πλεονοῦς; Cicero, De finibus, i, 13 ex cupiditatibus odia, dissidia, discordiae, seditiones, bella nascuntur; Seneca, De ira, ii, 35 ista quae appetitis quia

See note on 1<sup>14</sup>, and cf. Wendland and Kern, Beiträge zur Geschichte der griech. Philosophie und Religion, pp. 36-37; J. Drummond, Philo Judæus, ii, pp. 302-306.

In contrast to pleasure stands God. So Philo, Leg. all. ii, 23, M. p. 83, says that it is impossible to master pleasure except by complete submission to God. 4 Macc. 5<sup>22</sup> 6<sup>22</sup> represent, in more secular fashion, reason (λογισμός) and sound principles (φιλοσοφία) as able to control pleasure and desire; but Test. XII Patr. Benj. 6 shows true Jewish character in the sharp contrast which it draws: "[The good man] delighteth not in pleasure . . . for the Lord is his portion." This section of the Testament of Benjamin is full of parallels to James.

οὐκ ἔχετε returns to the matter of the unsatisfied desire (ἐπιθυμεῖτε καὶ οὐκ ἔχετε) in order to point out another aspect of the futility of pleasure as a supreme end. So long as men allow their lives to be governed by ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῶν ἡδονῶν, their desire is sure to be unsatisfied. The only sure source from which men can always receive is God. By choosing pleasure as their aim, men cut themselves off from this source, for they do not ask God for gratifications such as these, or, if they do, only find that their prayers, aiming at their own pleasures and not at his service, are unacceptable, and that they ought not to have offered them.

James's principle is: Make the service of God your supreme end, and then your desires will be such as God can fulfil in answer to your prayer (cf. Mt. 6<sup>31-33</sup>). Then there will be none of the present strife. Pleasures war, and cause war. Desire for pleasure, when made the controlling end, leads to violence, for longings then arise which can only be satisfied by the use of violence, since God, from whom alone come good things (1<sup>17</sup>), will not satisfy them.

It should be needless to point out that οὐκ ἔχετε is not thought of as the result of μάχεσθε καὶ πολεμεῖτε.

3. αἰτεῖτε, cf. Jas. 1<sup>5</sup> 1., Mt. 7<sup>7</sup> 21<sup>22</sup>, Mk. 11<sup>24</sup>, Lk. 11<sup>9</sup>, Jn. 14<sup>13</sup> 15<sup>7</sup>. 16 16<sup>23</sup> 1. 26, 1 Jn. 3<sup>22</sup> 5<sup>14</sup> 1.

Here, as often in secular Greek (cf. L. and S.), no difference in meaning is perceptible between the active and middle of αἰτεῖν. Cf. 1 Jn. 5<sup>15-16</sup> αἰτῶμεθα, ἡτήκαμεν, αἰτήσῃ, Mk. 6<sup>22</sup>, 24 αἰτησον, αἰτήσωμαι, and other examples quoted by Mayor.

That there was once a distinction in use is likely, but even the statements quoted by Stephanus, Thesaur. s. v., that αἰτεῖσθαι means to ask μετ' ἐκείνου or μετὰ παρακλήσεως do not make the matter intelligible. See J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 160; J. B. Mayor, in Expositor, 8th series, vol. iii, 1912, pp. 522-527; Hort, ad loc.

κακῶς, "wrongly," cf. Wisd. 14<sup>29</sup>. 30, 4 Macc. 6<sup>17</sup>. The following clause explains this to mean: "with the selfish purpose of securing pleasure, not of serving God," cf. Mt. 6<sup>32</sup>. For rabbinical ideas of bad prayers, see Schöttgen on Jas. 4<sup>3</sup>.

The promises are that the prayers of the righteous and the penitent will be heard; cf. Ps. 34<sup>16-17</sup> 145<sup>18</sup>, Prov. 10<sup>24</sup>, Ps. Sol. 6<sup>6</sup>, Lk. 18<sup>9-14</sup>, Jas. 1<sup>5</sup> 8., 1 Jn. 5<sup>14</sup>, Hermas, Sim. iv, 6.

ἵνα ἐν ταῖς ἡδοναῖς ὑμῶν δαπανήσητε. "ἐν marking the realm in rather than the object on" (Lex. s. v. δαπανᾶω). The distinction is thus not in the things prayed for, but in the purpose with which they are to be used, and for which they are desired—i. e. whether pleasure or the service of God. Hence probably the unusual, though not unexampled, preposition.

To this corresponds the position of the church as the bride of Christ (2 Cor. 11<sup>1</sup>, 2, Eph. 5<sup>24-25</sup>, Rev. 19<sup>7</sup> 21<sup>9</sup>). The term is often, as here, applied to individual members of the people of God; cf. Ex. 34<sup>15</sup>, Num. 15<sup>29</sup>, Ps. 73<sup>27</sup> πάντα τὸν πορνεύσαντα ἀπὸ σοῦ, Hos. 4<sup>12</sup>. The feminine μοιχαλὶς is alone appropriate in this sense, since God is always thought of as the husband.

The harsh word comes in abruptly; it anticipates and summarises the thought expressed in the verse itself. For the severity, and the direct address, cf. 1<sup>8</sup> 4<sup>13</sup> 5<sup>1</sup>.

The word is fully explained by the figurative sense: to take it literally (Winer, Spitta, Hort, and others) is to violate the context and to introduce a wholly foreign and uncalled-for idea. Moreover the feminine used alone is then inexplicable.

οὐκ οἶδατε. The idea which follows is at any rate familiar to the readers, whether or not these words (as Spitta thinks) introduce a quotation.

To make pleasure the chief aim is to take up with ἡ φιλία τοῦ κόσμου. To be "a friend of the world" is to be on good terms with the persons and forces and things that are at least indifferent toward God, if not openly hostile to him. It does not imply "conformity to heathen standards of living" (Hort), and is entirely appropriate in connection with a Jewish community.

The precise sense of ἡ φιλία τοῦ κόσμου is much discussed in the commentaries. For summary of views, see Beyschlag, who himself takes it in the active sense of "love," as given above.

ἔχθρα τοῦ θεοῦ, "enmity as regards God." The accentuation ἔχθρα, not ἐχθρά, is required in order to preserve the sharpness of the contrast. Cf. Rom. 8<sup>7</sup> ἔχθρα εἰς θεόν, Rom. 5<sup>10</sup> 11<sup>28</sup>, Col. 1<sup>21</sup>, in which passages, however, rather more of mutual relation is implied.

It is to be observed that a state of enmity between men and God differs from a state of enmity in ordinary human relations in that the permanent attitude of love on God's part is not thereby interrupted.

ὅς ἐάν for ὅς ἄν is characteristic of vernacular Greek, and is shown by the papyri to have been "specially common" in the first and second centuries after Christ. See J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 42-44, 234, where references to other discussions will be found; also Winer, § 42 fin., Blass, § 26. 4, and the references in Mayor's note, pp. 139 f.

ἡ γραφή. See 2<sup>23</sup> and note. The term must refer to "Holy Scripture." The quotation which follows is not found in the O. T., and either the writer has quoted (perhaps by mistake) from some other writing or a paraphrase, or else the Greek O. T. in some one of its forms had a sentence like this. The sentence seems to be a poetical rendering of the idea of Ex. 20<sup>5</sup>.

Various unsuccessful attempts are made to explain this sentence as not meant to be a quotation.

(1) The usual method is to take the two sentences πρὸς φθόνον ἐπικοθεῖ τὸ πνεῦμα δὲ κατήξιον ἐν ὑμῖν· μελῶνα δὲ διδωσιν χάριν, as a parenthesis (Hofmann, B. Weiss, and others). Against such an idea speaks the technical introductory formula, which here prepares for the quotation with unusual elaboration. Such a formula is generally (cf. v. <sup>5</sup>) followed at once by the quotation (Rom. 11<sup>2-4</sup> is no exception to this rule). Moreover, if what follows is not quoted, λέγει would have to be given the somewhat unusual meaning "speaks" (as in Acts 24<sup>10</sup>). Such a parenthesis would introduce confusion into the thought of an otherwise well-ordered and forcible passage and make the διό of v. <sup>5</sup> unaccountable.

(3) Neither can the sentence be accounted for as an inexact citation of such passages as Ex. 20<sup>5</sup> ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι κύριος ὁ θεός σου, θεός ζηλωτής, although the sense is akin.

(4) The attempt to make λέγει refer vaguely to the substance of v. <sup>5</sup> is also vain.

(5) Unacceptable are also the textual conjectures by which various scholars have tried to eliminate a supposed gloss: thus Erasmus and Grotius would excise διὸ λέγει . . . χάριν (cf. 1 Pet. 5<sup>5</sup>); Hottinger and Reiche, μελῶνα δὲ διδωσιν χάριν· διὸ λέγει (with the insertion of δὲ before θεός).

πρὸς φθόνον, "jealously," or, more exactly, "begrudgingly."

πρὸς with accusative is a regular periphrasis for the adverb; so πρὸς βίαιαν for βιαίως, πρὸς ὀργήν, "angrily," πρὸς εὐτελείαν, "cheaply," πρὸς ἡδονὴν καὶ χάριν, "pleasantly and graciously" (Jos. Ant. xii, 10<sup>1</sup>). See L. and S. s. v. πρὸς C. III. 7; Lex. s. v. πρὸς I, 3. g. This idiom is not found elsewhere in the N. T.; see Schmid, Athicismus, iv, Index.

*The objection, however, that this interpretation makes it necessary to take ἡ γραφή to mean "the Scriptures" as a whole is not conclusive, cf. Lightfoot on Gal. 3<sup>10</sup>, Hort on 1 Pet. 2<sup>6</sup>.

φθόνος means primarily "ill will," "malice," due to the good fortune of the one against whom it is directed, λύπη ἐκ' ἀλλοτρίοις ἀγαθοῖς (Diog. Laert. vii, 63. 111; see other similar definitions in Trench, Synonyms, § xxvi). This begrudging spirit may be shown in the refusal either to give or to share (so especially the verb φθονέω); or in the jealous ill will of the gods toward overfortunate mortals; or in other ways corresponding to some of the meanings of English "envy" and "jealousy," neither of which, however, is in meaning wholly co-terminous with φθόνος. See Trench, l. c.; L. and S. s. v. φθόνος, φθονέω, φθονος, φθονία. So, like English "jealousy," φθόνος is used in a bad sense of the ill will felt toward another with whom one has to share a prized object, but it does not seem ever to be quite equivalent to the English term for the lover's, or husband's, "jealousy"; the object of the emotion seems always to have been found in the hated possessor, not (as often in the English word) in the prized object.

The Latin equivalent of φθόνος is invidia, from which comes English "envy." But the English word is in modern times often used in a milder sense, with reference only to the desire for equal good fortune with another and with no thought of ill will. It thus approaches more nearly the sense of ζῆλος, just as the English "jealousy" (see on 3<sup>14</sup> 4<sup>1</sup>), though derived from ζῆλος, zelus, has acquired much of the peculiar meaning of φθόνος.

πρὸς φθόνον limits ἐπιποθεῖ. To connect it with λέγει yields but a poor sense.

When connected with λέγει, πρὸς is usually taken in the sense of "with reference to," or "against" (so Spitta). But there has been no previous mention of φθόνος in this paragraph to account for the introduction of such a quotation relating to it. If the phrase is connected with λέγει and taken in the sense "enviously," as explaining κενῶς, it lacks the proper, and indispensable, conjunction to connect it with κενῶς (inserted by "Œcumenius" in his paraphrase: οὐ γὰρ κενῶς ἦτοι ματαίως, ἢ πρὸς φθόνον), and the general sense is less satisfactory.

As subject of ἐπιποθεῖ we may supply ὁ θεός, and then take τὸ πνεῦμα as object of the verb; or τὸ πνεῦμα may be taken as subject and ἡμᾶς supplied as object. In the former case τὸ πνεῦμα means the human spirit breathed into man by God (cf. Gen. 2<sup>7</sup>, Is. 42<sup>s</sup>, Eccles. 12<sup>7</sup>, Num. 16<sup>22</sup> 27<sup>16</sup>, Zech. 12<sup>1</sup>, Heb. 12<sup>9</sup>).

This has the advantage that ἐπιποθεῖ and κατῳκίσειεν then have the same subject, and seems on the whole better. κατῳκίσειεν contains a hint of God's rightful ownership through creation.

On the other hand, τὸ πνεῦμα as subject would mean the Holy Spirit, to whom this would be the only reference in the epistle. In favour of this is the fact that the conception of the Holy Spirit as dwelling in man is repeatedly found in the N. T. and in early Christian literature. Cf. Ezek. 36<sup>17</sup>, Rom. 8<sup>11</sup>, 1 Cor. 3<sup>16</sup> τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ θεοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν οἰκᾷ, Hermas, Sim. v, 6<sup>7</sup>, Mand. iii, 1, v, 2, De aleatoribus, 3.

Weinel, Wirkungen des Geistes und der Geiste, p. 159, suggests that ἐπιποθεῖ here (like λυπαίτε, Eph. 4<sup>9</sup>) refers to the idea of Hermas, Sim. v, 6<sup>7</sup>, ix, 32, that God has given us as a deposit a pure spirit, which we are bound to return to him unimpaired. "God jealously requires back the spirit, pure as he gave it." But this interesting interpretation is not supported by any clear indication in the context.

If taken thus as a declarative sentence, the quoted passage means "God is a jealous lover." This obviously suits perfectly the preceding context.

By some the sentence is taken interrogatively. It will then mean, "Does the Spirit, set within us by God, desire to the extent of becoming jealous?" and will express the incompatibility of the Spirit with the sin of jealousy. But (1) this would require μή to introduce the question; (2) φθόνος is too weak a word after πόλεμοι, μάχαι, φονεύετε; and (3) the general meaning of the sentence becomes altogether far less suited to the context.

Mayor<sup>1</sup>, pp. 141-145 gives a convenient and full summary of the various views held about this verse, relating to (1) the construction of πρὸς φθόνον, (2) the meaning of πρὸς φθόνον, (3) the subject of ἐπιποθεῖ. A large amount of material is to be found in Heisen, Novae hypotheses, pp. 881-928, Pott, "Excursus IV," pp. 329-355, and Gebser, pp. 329-346, who gives the views of commentators at length. See also W. Grimm, Studien und Kritiken, vol. xxvii, 1854, pp. 934-956; and Kirn, Studien und Kritiken, vol. lxxvii, 1904, pp. 127-133, 593-604, where the conjecture ΠΡΟΣΤΟΝΘῆΝ for ΠΡΟΣΦΘΟΝΟΝ (first proposed by Wetstein, 1730) is elaborately, but unconvincingly, defended, and the quotation explained as a combination of Ps. 42<sup>1</sup> and Eccles. 12<sup>7</sup>. P. Corsen, Göttingische gelehrte Anzeigen, 1893, pp. 596 f., defends the conjecture ἐπιποθεῖτε, and the sense: "In envy ye desire: but the Spirit which God hath put within you giveth greater grace; sub-ject yourselves, therefore, to God."

κατώκισεν] KLP minn<sup>pas</sup> ff vg boh syr<sup>as</sup>. The weight of external evidence leads to a (somewhat doubtful) decision for κατώκισεν.

6. μελζονα δὲ δίδωσιν χάριν. God makes rigorous requirements of devotion, but gives gracious help in order that men may be able to render the undivided allegiance which he exacts. The subject of δίδωσιν is clearly ὁ θεός (cf. κατώκισεν). That the phrase is drawn from, and directly prepares for, the quotation from Proverbs which follows makes it unlikely that this sentence is part of the quotation of v. 5.

μελζονα. The comparative is most naturally taken as meaning "greater grace in view of the greater requirement."

Another interpretation is that of Bede: "majorem gratiam dominus dat quam amicitia mundi"; so also many other commentators.

χάριν. The context seems to require that this be understood of the "gracious gift" of aid to fulfil the requirement of whole-hearted allegiance. Cf. 1 Pet. 3<sup>7</sup>, Eph. 4<sup>7</sup>. On the meaning of χάρις, cf. J. A. Robinson, Ephesians, pp. 221 ff.

Those who take χάριν in the sense of "favour," i. e. not the means of complying, but a reward for complying, have difficulty with μελζονα, which is then inappropriate; and the idea itself suits the context less well.

διὸ λέγει, sc. ἡ γραφή or ὁ θεός. A regular formula of quotation, Eph. 4<sup>8</sup> 5<sup>14</sup>, Heb. 3<sup>7</sup>; διὸ (cf. Gen. 10<sup>9</sup>, Num. 21<sup>14</sup>) means that the truth just affirmed has given rise to the sacred utterance to be quoted. On the formula, see Surenhusius, Βίβλος καταλλαγῆς, 1713, p. 9.

The quotation from Prov. 3<sup>34</sup> illustrates and confirms the main position of the preceding passage, vv. 1-3, viz. that God will not yield to Pleasure a part of the allegiance of men's hearts, but that by his grace he enables men to render to him undivided allegiance. "So says the Scripture: 'God is opposed to the proud and worldly, it is the humble who receive his gift of grace.' Hence (vv. 7<sup>a</sup>.) to gain his favour we must humble ourselves before him." The quotation thus has the important function of making the transition from the negative to the positive aspects of the subject, cf. the use of it in Clem. Rom. 30<sup>3</sup>.

The quotation is taken verbatim from the LXX of Prov. 3<sup>34</sup>, except that ὁ θεός is substituted for κύριος. This is also the case in the same quotation in 1 Pet. 5<sup>1</sup> and Clem. Rom. 30, and is probably due to a common form of popular quotation.

On the theory of Oort (1885) and Grätz (1892-94), that the obscure Hebrew עו in the passage quoted is a corruption of עוֹלָם, which has been preserved in James, 1 Peter, and Clem. Rom., see Toy on Prov. 3<sup>34</sup>.

ὑπερηφάνους, "haughty persons," here applied to those who, despising the claims of God, devote themselves to worldly pleasures and position, and insolently look down on others, especially on the humble pious. They are haughty both toward God and toward men, and are here identified with the "friends of the world." Cf. 1<sup>10</sup> 2<sup>6-7</sup> 5<sup>1-6</sup>.

ταπεινοίς, "humble persons." Here applied primarily to those who are humble toward God (cf. v. 7 ὑποτάγητε, v. 10 ταπεινώθητε ἐνώπιον Κυρίου), but not without thought of the same persons' lowly position in the community, cf. 1<sup>10</sup> 2<sup>5</sup>.

Spitta (pp. 117-123) has ingeniously argued that the unidentifiable quotation in v. 8 is from the apocryphal book "Eldad and Modad" (cf. Num. 11<sup>14-15</sup>). This work is referred to by Hermas (Vis. ii, 3<sup>9</sup>), and Lightfoot suggests that the quotation given as γραφή in Clem. Rom. 23<sup>1f</sup>. and as ὁ προφητικὸς λόγος in 2 Clem. Rom. 11<sup>2-4</sup>, as well as the one in Clem. Rom. 17<sup>1</sup>, come from it. Spitta believes that, besides furnishing the quotation, it has also influenced the context here in James.

The basis of his view is an exegesis which translates the passage thus: "Think ye that the Scripture says in vain concerning envy: 'It (i. e. envy) longeth to possess the Spirit which He hath made to dwell in us; but He giveth (because of that envy) greater grace (to us)'?"

This suggests to Spitta, following Surenhusius and Schöttgen, the situation of Num. 11<sup>10-12</sup>, where Eldad and Modad are complained of by the envious Joshua because they have the spirit of prophecy, which no longer rests on him and the others of the Seventy Elders. The haggadic development (Wünsche, Midrasch Bemidbar Rabba, pp. 408 f.) emphasised the greater grace granted to Eldad and Modad, which is explained by R. Tanchuma (Bemidbar r. 15) as due to their greater humility, since they modestly declined to be included in the number of the Seventy.

The resemblance is here striking, provided the underlying exegesis of James be once accepted. But that requires the conjecture φθονεῖτε for φονεύετε in v. 3, and the consequent understanding of the whole passage as dealing primarily with φθόνος as its topic. It would thus make necessary a wholly different apprehension of the author's purpose from that presented above.

Some of the confirmatory resemblances which Spitta finds between James and passages that may be supposed to have some connection with Eldad and Modad are curious. Thus, Hermas, Vis. ii, 3<sup>1</sup>, cf. Jas. 4<sup>1</sup>; Clem. Rom. 23 (2 Clem. Rom. 11), cf. Jas. 4<sup>1f</sup>. διψυχοι, ταλαιπωρήσατε, 3<sup>1f</sup> ἀκαταστασία, 1<sup>1</sup> 5<sup>1f</sup>.; Clem. Rom. 17<sup>1</sup>, cf. Jas. 4<sup>1f</sup> ἀταλς.

Spitta would also connect with Eldad and Modad the unlocated quotation in Clem. Rom. 46<sup>1</sup>, in which he finds some resemblance to the story of Korah, Num. 16. And he compares Hermas, Vis. iii, 6 Sim. viii, 8, which seem to him to allude to this passage.

But the evidence collected is not sufficient to overturn the more natural interpretation of the general course of thought in the context. Spitta's theory introduces a whole series of incongruous ideas, which have no good connection with what precedes and lead to nothing in what follows; and it must be pronounced fantastic.

7-10. Practical exhortation to the choice of God instead of pleasure as the chief end.

These verses are addressed to the whole body of Christians, who are all subject to these moral dangers, and some of whom may be supposed to be liable to the reproach contained in ὑπερήφανοι, ἁμαρτωλοί, δόσυχνοι.

It is interesting to notice how James's religious ideal of penitent devotion to God here diverges from the Stoic ideal of reason as ruler over all passion and desire, which is given as the teaching of the Jewish law in 4 Macc. 5<sup>21</sup>.

7. οὖν, "in view of the relation of God and his service to the pursuit of worldly pleasures." Cf. for similar grounding of practical exhortations, Rom. 13<sup>13</sup> 14<sup>19</sup>, Gal. 5<sup>1</sup> 6<sup>10</sup>, Eph. 4<sup>25</sup> (διδό) 5<sup>15</sup>, Col. 2<sup>16</sup> 3<sup>1</sup>, 5, 12.

ὑποτάγητε, "submit yourselves" (A.V.; better than R.V. "be subject"), i. e. "become ταπεινοί" (v. 9), cf. ταπεινώθητε, v. 10.

On this and the eight following aorist imperatives, the more "pungent" form, see note on 1<sup>2</sup>.

On the passive aorist with the significance of the middle voice, which is a common phenomenon of the late language, cf. Buttmann, § 113. 4 (Eng. transl. p. 51); Winer, § 39. 2; J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 152-163, especially p. 163; note μαρτυρήσεται 1<sup>11</sup>, ταπεινώθητε 4<sup>10</sup>.

ὑποτάσσομαι is used elsewhere in the N. T. of voluntary submission to God only in Heb. 12<sup>1</sup>, where the analogy of submission to earthly fathers has occasioned the use of the word. It is also found in Ps. 37<sup>7</sup> 62<sup>1</sup>, Hag. 2<sup>18</sup>, 2 Macc. 9<sup>11</sup>, in the sense of general submission of the whole soul to God. Submission is more than obedience, it involves humility (Calvin).

ἀντίστητε δὲ τῷ διαβόλῳ. "Take a bold stand in resisting temptations to worldliness sent by 'the prince of this world' (Jn. 14<sup>30</sup>), and you will be successful."

This idea seems to have been a commonplace of early Christian thought; cf. 1 Pet. 5<sup>8</sup>, where, as here, the quotation of Prov. 3<sup>4</sup> precedes, but where it is better not to assume literary connection with James. For the conception of a fight with the devil, cf. Eph. 6<sup>11</sup> f. and see Weinel, Wirkungen des Gestes und der Geiste, pp. 17 f.

The following passages may be compared:

Test. XII Patr. Nephth. 8<sup>1</sup> ἐὰν οὖν καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐργάσασθε τὸ καλόν . . . ὁ διάβολος φεύξεται ἀπ' ὑμῶν, Issach. 7<sup>1</sup> ταῦτα καὶ ὑμεῖς, τέκνα μου, ποιῆτε, καὶ πᾶν πνεῦμα τοῦ Βελλάρ φεύξεται ἀπ' ὑμῶν, Benj. 5<sup>1</sup>, Dan 5<sup>1</sup>.

In these passages from Test. XII Patr., however, the thought is different; good conduct is there the means by which the devil is driven off, and the idea is that right action diminishes the chance of being tempted later on. James, on the other hand, is merely saying that boldness will avail against the tempter.

8. ἐγγίσατε, as those who wish to be in the closest possible relation to God.

It is assumed throughout that the ostensible purpose of the persons addressed is right. They intend to be God's servants, but by yielding to natural inclinations they are in practise verging toward a state of ἐχθρα τοῦ θεοῦ.

To draw near to God is used of the priests in the temple, Ex. 19<sup>22</sup>, Ezek. 44<sup>12</sup>. It is half figurative in Ex. 24<sup>2</sup>, Is. 29<sup>12</sup>, and wholly so in such passages as the following: Hos. 12<sup>6</sup>, Wisd. 6<sup>19</sup> (20), Judith 8<sup>27</sup>, Heb. 7<sup>19</sup> (cf. 4<sup>16</sup>); cf. Ps. 145<sup>18</sup>, Deut. 4, and Philo's comment in De migr. Abr. 11, M. p. 445. Test. XII Patr. Dan 6<sup>2</sup> ἐγγίσατε τῷ θεῷ, is an instructive parallel.

καθαρίσατε χεῖρας, "make your outward conduct pure." From the ritual washing to make fit for religious duties (e. g. Gen. 35<sup>2</sup>, Ex. 30<sup>17-21</sup>), which was perfectly familiar in N. T. times (cf. Mk. 7<sup>3</sup>), sprang a figurative use of language, e. g. Is. 1<sup>16</sup>, Job 17<sup>9</sup> 22<sup>20</sup>, 1 Tim. 2<sup>8</sup>, Clem. Rom. 29<sup>1</sup>. In Ps. 23<sup>4</sup> ἀθῶς χερσὶν καὶ καθαρὸς τῇ καρδίᾳ, and in Ecclus. 38<sup>10</sup> the combination found in James is already complete.

χεῖρας, καρδίας. For the omission of the article, cf. Schmiedel-Winer, § 19. 7, where it is explained under the rule that pairs of nouns often omit the article.

ἀμαρτωλοί. A sharp term is used to strike the conscience of the reader, and is then partly explained by the parallel δόψυχοι. Half-hearted Christians, such as James desires to stir to better things, are in reality nothing but "world's people"—a reproach meant to startle and sting. δόψυχοι, "doubters," is entirely parallel.

The word ἁμαρτωλός is very rare in secular Greek, but there, as in the O. T. and N. T., has the sense of "hardened sinner," "bad man," cf. Plutarch, De aud. poet. 7, p. 25 C, the standing phrase τελῶναι καὶ ἁμαρτωλοί, Mt. 9<sup>11</sup>, etc., and the application of ἁμαρτωλός to heathen, 1 Macc. 1<sup>4</sup>, Gal. 2<sup>15</sup>, etc. Cf. Enoch 5<sup>1</sup> 38<sup>1</sup> 45<sup>1</sup> 94<sup>11</sup> 95<sup>1</sup> 2. 7 96<sup>1</sup> 2. 4. Suidas defines ἁμαρτωλοί as οἱ παρανομία συζῆν προαιρούμενοι καὶ βίον διεφθαρμένον ἀσπαζόμενοι.

ἀγνίστατε καρδίας. ἀγνός means "clean," "pure," ceremonially (Jn. 11<sup>55</sup>), and so morally. The latter development had already been made (otherwise than in the case of ἅγιος) in secular Greek use.

δίψυχοι. It is here implied that δίψυχα involves some defilement from the world, cf. Hermas, Mand. ix, 7 καθάρισον τὴν καρδίαν σου ἀπὸ τῆς δίψυχας. Test. XII Patr. Aser 3<sup>2</sup>, οἱ διπρόσωποι οὐκ εἰσὶ τοῦ θεοῦ ἀλλὰ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτῶν δουλεύουσιν, is an excellent commentary on this verse.

9. "Make yourselves wretched, mourn, lament; that is a state of mind more suited to a Christian than worldly gaiety and joy!"

This is primarily a call to repentance; but, more than that, it is a vehemently expressed recommendation of sober earnestness as the proper mood of a Christian, in contrast to a light and frivolous spirit. The writer was a sober man who felt the seriousness of living, and wished that others should feel and express it; in a word, a Puritan.

The force of James's exhortation must not be reduced by interpretation, nor its range unduly limited. There is positive emphasis on the sadness, and even anguish, which is appropriate to the readers' actual situation, and which they ought to seek, not try to avoid, cf. Mt. 5<sup>4</sup>. Yet neither must the words be misunderstood as representing that a cheerfulness founded on the joy of faith is wrong for a soul which knows itself at one with God (cf. 1<sup>24</sup>). James is not giving a complete directory for conduct at all times, but is trying by the unexpected intensity of his language to startle half-hearted Christians into a

ταλαιπωρέω in itself is not limited to mental anguish, nor to repentance. It is here used in order to make a sharp contrast with the pleasures which the persons addressed are seeking. They had better, says James, make wretchedness their aim, and so humble themselves in penitence and obedience before God.

πενθεῖν "expresses a self-contained grief, never violent in its manifestations" (Lex.); see Trench, Synonyms, § lxxv. But the two words are here used merely to secure a forcible fullness of expression.

There is no ground for taking πενθήσατε specifically of an outward garb of mourning.

πενθήσατε καὶ κλαύσατε] NA omit καὶ; perhaps by accidental confusion of KAI with ΚΛΑ—. The omission would connect πενθήσατε with the preceding, and separate it from κλαύσατε in a very unnatural way.

ὁ γέλως ὑμῶν, pertaining to their present easy ways. This sentence makes the preceding words more intelligible.

μεταστραφήτω]  $\aleph$ AKL minn<sup>10a</sup>. Apparently an emendation, substituting a more familiar verb.

κατήφειαν, "dejection," "gloominess," from κατηφής, "of a downcast look." In accordance with its origin the word refers primarily to the outward expression of a heavy heart, cf. the publican in Lk. 18<sup>13</sup>. The word (not found in LXX; nor elsewhere in N. T.) is frequently used of dejection due to shame, and this association may have governed the choice of it here. Cf. Lex., L. and S., Wetstein, for many examples; and see Field, Notes on the Translation of the N. T., p. 238.

10. ταπεινώθητε "humble yourselves." James here returns to the starting-point of his exhortation (v. <sup>6</sup> ταπεινοῖς), and sums up in ταπεινώθητε the several acts directed in vv. 7-9. This act implies single-hearted faith, and such a soul has a sure reward from God, cf. 1<sup>9</sup>. See references in Lex. s. v. ταπεινοφροσύνη, and cf. Eccclus. 2<sup>17</sup> οἱ φοβούμενοι κύριον . . . ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ ταπεινώσουσιν τὰς ψυχὰς αὐτῶν, 3<sup>18</sup> 7<sup>17</sup>. ταπεινώω means "to confess and deplore one's spiritual littleness and unworthiness" (Lex.).

1 Pet. 5<sup>a</sup> bears close resemblance in form, and is noticeable because of the complicated resemblance of the context in Jas. 4 and 1 Pet. 5. But the meaning is different. Here in James it is a humbling of the soul before God, with repentance, and is in contrast to υπερηφανία. 1 Peter is exhorting to a spirit of submissiveness to God (τὴν κραταῖαν χεῖρα τοῦ θεοῦ), even when his providence appears in the hardships of persecution (v. <sup>7</sup> τὴν μέριμναν ὑμῶν ἐπιρρίψαντες ἐπ' αὐτόν), cf. also 1 Pet. 1<sup>18</sup> 3<sup>17</sup> 4<sup>12</sup> <sup>2</sup>.

11-12. "Do not talk harshly of one another. He who judges his brother, sets himself above the law of love, and infringes on the prerogative of God, who alone is lawgiver and judge."

Vv. <sup>11</sup> and <sup>12</sup> come in as a sort of appendix, much as 5<sup>12-20</sup> is attached as an appendix after the whole epistle has received a fitting conclusion in 5<sup>11</sup>. The thought of the writer reverts (cf. 1<sup>28</sup> 3<sup>1-10</sup>) to those facts of life which had given him the text for his far-reaching discussion and exhortation (4<sup>1-10</sup>), and before passing to other matters he offers an example of how one particular form of μάχη is at variance with a proper attitude to God. The writer still has fully in mind the great opposition of the world and God, and hence probably arises the somewhat strained form in which the rebuke of vv. <sup>11-12</sup> is couched.

Criticism of others is often occasioned by a supposed moral lapse, and it may well be, as Schneckenburger suggests, that this was what James had here specially in mind. If that were the case these verses would be a very neat turning of the tables, quite in the style of this epistle (cf. 2<sup>24</sup>), and the peculiar form of the rebuke, and its attachment as an appendix, would also be partly accounted for. To this would correspond the address ἀδελφοί, v. <sup>11</sup>, to which μοιχαλίδες, v. <sup>4</sup>, ἀμαρτωλοί, δύσυχτοι, v. <sup>8</sup>, present a marked contrast but no real contradiction. This passage in James would then correspond closely with the mode of thought of Rom. 14<sup>10</sup>, where the καταλαλιά rebuked is occasioned by laxity and by intolerance, and where, as here, the reader is told that such judgment may safely be left to God the Judge.

On the present imperative, cf. Winer, § 43, 3, § 56, 1, b; Buttmann, § 139, 6; Gildersleeve, Syntax, § 415. Contrast the aorists of vv. <sup>7-10</sup>. The present is here appropriate in the sense "desist from." καταλαλιά is habitual and should be stopped.

The word is used in this sense in writers of the Koiné (Polyb. Diod. C. I. G. 1770; see L. and S.) and in the Greek O. T.; cf. Ps. 101<sup>4</sup>, where τὸν καταλαλοῦντα λόθρα τὸν πλεόνον αὐτοῦ evidently refers to

What is meant here is indulgence in unkind talk. Nothing indicates that anything more is intended than the harsh criticism common in ancient and modern daily life. It is not directed especially against the mutual backbiting of the teachers (4<sup>14</sup> #.). For such a view as, e. g. Pfeleiderer's, that this is a polemic against Marcion's attitude of superiority to the Jewish law, there is no more reason (note the address ἀδελφοί) than for the idea (Schneckenburger) of a rebuke of those who tore Paul's character to pieces behind his back.

καταλαλεῖ νόμου καὶ κρίνει νόμον, i. e. in so far as he thereby violates the royal law of love (2<sup>5</sup>, note the context preceding the precept in Lev. 19<sup>18</sup>), and so sets himself up as superior to it. Speaking against the law involves judging the law.

νόμου, i. e. the whole code of morals accepted by the readers, as 1<sup>25</sup> 2<sup>9</sup>. νόμος without the article does not here differ from ὁ νόμος. The particular clause in question is evidently the "second great commandment," cf. the phrase τὸν πλησίων, v. 12. ποιητῆς νόμου, cf. 1<sup>22</sup> 1. (and note), Rom. 2<sup>13</sup>, 1 Macc. 2<sup>67</sup>. These are the only cases in the Bible of this phrase, which in secular Greek means "lawgiver," not "doer of the law."

κριτής, thus claiming a superiority to the law such as belongs to God alone. The judge is here thought of, not as himself acting under law, but more as the royal judge, the fountain of right, i. e. such a judge as God is—an idea of κριτής which includes νομοθέτης.

κριτής is not to be expanded into κριτής νόμου, "critic of the law" (cf. νόμον κριτής), as is done by many commentators, for that idea has already been fully expressed, while in κριτής we have evidently a new idea and a step forward in the argument.

V. 11 bears a close relation to the thought of Rom. 2<sup>1</sup> 14<sup>4</sup>, but the resemblance does not imply literary dependence.

God, not Christ, appears clearly intended here; ὁ κριτής in 5<sup>9</sup> is not decisive against this, and νομοθέτης is far more likely to be used of God, while εἰς ἐστὶν unequivocally means God. εἰς is used in order to emphasise the uniqueness, not the unity, of the lawgiver.

The word is here added to κριτής because the latter does not fully express the idea of complete superiority to the law.

The reading without the article makes νομοθέτης predicate and is more expressive. The article was probably inserted to bring an unusual expression into conformity with the more common type of sentence.

καὶ κριτής] om KL minn. External evidence here outweighs, on the whole, the authority of the lectio brevior.

ὁ δυνάμενος σῶσαι καὶ ἀπολέσαι. Cf. Mt. 10<sup>28</sup>. God's almighty power, to which we are wholly subject, gives him the right to judge. Cf. Hermas, Mand. xii, 6<sup>3</sup> τὸν πάντα δυνάμενον, σῶσαι καὶ ἀπολέσαι, Sim. ix, 23<sup>4</sup> ὡς δυνάμενος ἀπολέσαι ἢ σῶσαι αὐτόν. Cf. Ps. 68<sup>20</sup>, Deut. 32<sup>39</sup>, 1 Sam. 2<sup>8</sup>, 2 Kings 5<sup>7</sup>. This description of God must have been common in Jewish use.

After the discussion of the fundamental sin of choosing pleasure and not God as the chief end of life, two paragraphs follow illustrating by practical examples the neglect of God. Both paragraphs are introduced by the same words, and lack the address, ἀδελφοί.

The persons in mind in vv. 13-17 may or may not be Christians. V. 17 implies that these presumptuous persons know better. The type of travelling traders referred to was common among Jews. The ease of travel in ancient times is amply illustrated by the Book of Acts and the epistles of Paul. Cf. C. A. J. Skeel, Travel in the First Century after Christ, 1901; Zahn, "Weltverkehr und Kirche während der drei ersten Jahrhunderte," in Skizzen aus dem Leben der alten Kirche<sup>2</sup>, 1898.

The aorist subjunctive (πορευσώμεθα, etc.) is read in each case by KLSV<sup>7</sup> minn. A has πορευσώμεθα, ποιήσωμεν, ἐμπορευσόμεθα, καρθήσομεν.

The context speaks on the whole for the future indicative. In such a case external evidence has little weight (cf. Rom. 5<sup>1</sup>).

τήνδε τὴν πόλιν, "this city"; not "such a city" (A.V.; Luther: "in die und die Stadt"; Erasmus: in hanc aut illam civitatem).

ποιήσομεν, "pass," "spend." See Lex. s. v. ποιέω II. d, for examples of this meaning, which is said to be confined to later Greek.

ἐμπορευσόμεθα, "traffic," "do business."

This word is not very common in the Greek O. T., and is found only a few times in this sense (e. g. Gen. 34<sup>19</sup> 42<sup>24</sup>). In secular Greek it is used in this sense: cf. Thuc. vii, 13, and other references in L. and S.

κερδήσομεν. That travel is for the purpose of gain was obvious to Greek thought, cf. Anthol. palat. ix, 446 ἀγρὸς τέρψιν ἄγει, κέρδος πλός.

14. οἷτινες, with full classical meaning, "of such a nature that." For the loose grammatical attachment, cf. 1<sup>7</sup> 1. ἀνήρ διψυχος.

ἄσκοπός ἐστι βροτῶν θάνατος, τὸ δὲ μέλλον ἄδηλον,

Seneca, Ep. 101, especially §§ 4-6, quam stultum est, aetatem disponere ne crastini quidem dominum . . . nihil sibi quisquam de futuro debet promittere, etc., etc. Other passages on the uncertainty of life are collected by Plutarch, Consolatio ad Apollonium, 11, p. 107, and in Stobæus, Anthol. iv, cap. 31, "Ὅτι ἀβέβαιος ἡ τῶν ἀνθρώπων εὐπραξία, μεταπιπτούσης ραδῶς τῆς τύχης, where especially the tragedians are drawn on. But in both the N. T. and Philo the commonplace is given a different turn: "let the uncertainty of life remind you of your dependence on God."

ἀτμός, "vapour," cf. 1<sup>11</sup>. Cf. Clem. Rom. 17<sup>8</sup> (from "Eldad and Modad"?), ἐγὼ (i. e. Abraham) δέ εἰμι ἀτμός ἀπὸ κύβρας ("steam from a pot"). For the comparison of the life of the wicked to smoke and vapour, cf. 4 Ezra 7<sup>11</sup>, Apoc. Bar. 82<sup>8</sup>.

Whether James meant "smoke" or "steam" is impossible to determine. In the LXX the word is several times used of smoke, Gen. 19<sup>28</sup>, Lev. 16<sup>11</sup>, Eccus. 22<sup>21</sup> (?) 24<sup>18</sup>, Hos. 13<sup>8</sup> (?), although it properly means vapour, in distinction from καπνός; cf. Aristotle, Meteor. ii, 4, p. 359 b. The very similar passage Wisd. 2<sup>4</sup> uses ομίχλη, "mist." Cf. Ps. 102<sup>8</sup> ἐξέλιπον ὡσεὶ καπνός αἱ ἡμέραι μου, Ps. 37<sup>30</sup>.

φαίτομένη, ἔπειτα καὶ ἀφανιζομένη, "appearing and then disappearing," with a more delicate play on words than is quite reproducible in the English rendering.

The same contrast and play is found in Aristotle, Hist. an. vi, 7, Ps.-Aristotle, De mundo, vi, 22, and evidently was a turn of expression common in Greek usage.

οἵτινες οὐκ ἐπίστασθε τὸ τῆς αὔριον· ποῖα ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν; ἀτιμὲς γάρ ἐστε [ἡ] πρὸς ὄλγον φαίνομένη, ἔπειτα καὶ ἀφανιζομένη.

τὰ τῆς αὔριον] AP 33 minn syr<sup>hal</sup> boh.

The external evidence is strongly for τὸ τῆς αὔριον, in view of the tendency of B to omit articles and the demonstrably emended character of A 33 (cf. Prov. 27<sup>1</sup>, which may have been in the emender's mind).

The "intrinsic" evidence of fitness also speaks for the retention of τὸ. In the text of B (οὐκ ἐπίστασθε τῆς αὔριον ποῖα ζωὴ ὑμῶν) the writer would declare that the censured traders do not know what are to be to-morrow the conditions of their life—e. g. whether sickness or health, fair weather or foul. In fact, however, the latter part of this same verse (ἀτιμὲς κτλ.) and v. 14 (ζήσομεν) show that the uncertainty of life itself is what he has in mind. Hence ποῖα cannot be connected with ἐπίστασθε to form an indirect question, but must be a direct interrogative introducing a direct question to which ἀτιμὲς κτλ. gives the answer.

15. ἀντὶ τοῦ λέγειν properly belongs with λέγοντες, v. 13.

The expressions ἐὰν θεὸς θέλῃ, σὺν θεῷ, θεῶν βουλομένων, τῶν θεῶν θελόντων, or the equivalent, were in common use among the ancient Greeks. For references to papyri, see Deissmann, Neue Bibelstudien, 1897, p. 80; see also Lietzmann on 1 Cor. 4<sup>19</sup>. Cf. Plato, *Alcib. Similar expressions were also in familiar use by the Romans, from whom the modern deo volente is derived. Cf. Lampridius, *Alex. The corresponding formula inshallah, "if God will," has been for many centuries a common colloquial expression of modern Arabic, cf. Lane, Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians, ch. 13. It is not unlikely that the Mohammedans derived it from the Syrians, and that these had it from the Greeks. The Jews do not seem to have commonly used any such formula either in Biblical or in Talmudic times.

* On this whole passage, see Corsen, Göttingische gelehrte Anzeigen, 1893, pp. 578 f.; B. Weiss, Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, vol. xxxvii, 1894, pp. 434 f. The view taken above is substantially that of Corsen. The resulting text is the same as that underlying the translation of the English R.V.

The use of such formulas "was introduced to the Jews by the Mohammedans" (L. Ginzberg, JE, art. "Ben Sira, Alphabet of").

The statement often found that the practise recommended was a part of Jewish customary piety in N. T. times goes back at least to J. Gregory, whose Notes and Observations on Some Passages of Scripture, first published in 1646, are reprinted in Latin in Critici sacri, 1660, vol. ix. He quotes from the "Alphabet of Ben Sira" (written not earlier than the eleventh century; see JE, l. c.) a Jewish instance of the formula, and evidently based his statement ("mos erat inter Judæos") on this, with, perhaps, some knowledge of the ways of mediæval and later Jews. For the passage from the "Alphabet," see Schöttgen, Horæ hebr. pp. 1030 f.; the earliest use of it to illustrate Jas. 4th is probably J. Drusius, Quæstiones hebraicæ, iii, 24, 1599 (reprinted in Critici sacri, vol. viii).

The origin of this type of "apotropaic" formula among the Greeks and Romans is to be sought in the notions of divine vengeance for human presumption, to be averted by thus refraining from a positive assertion about the future.

ζήσωμεν, ποιήσωμεν] KLS<sup>7</sup> 048 minn<sup>1st</sup>. Probably emendation due to a mistaken notion that these verbs were included under εἶν.

See Beyschlag for references to older discussion of this variant. The two Mss. (181, 328) alleged (by Wetstein and later critics) to contain the reading ζήσωμεν . . . ποιήσωμεν both read —ω— in both cases.

καυχᾶσθε ἐν ταῖς ἀλαζοναῖς ὑμῶν, "glory in these your acts of presumption." καυχᾶσθε is thrown into strong emphasis by νῦν δέ. Instead of humility toward God, their attitude is one of boasting.

ἀλαζοναῖς refers to the attitude described in v. 13 (οἱ λέγοντες), καυχᾶσθε (which carries the emphasis) signifies an aggravation of it, viz. the pride which they take in their own overweening self-confidence and presumption. ἐν indicates that ἀλαζονίαι are the ground of the glorying, cf. 1<sup>9</sup>.

Another view takes καυχᾶσθαι of the arrogant talk itself, described in v. 15, and understands ἐν as merely giving the presumptuous manner of it (Mayor: "the manner in which glorying was shown, 'in your self-confident speeches or imaginations' = ἀλαζονευόμενοι"), cf. Clem. Rom. 21<sup>8</sup> ἀνθρώποις ἐγκαυχώμενοις ἐν ἀλαζονίᾳ τοῦ λόγου. This is possible, but is repetitious, and gives no such advance in the thought as the emphatic οὖν δέ seems to call for.

17. This is a maxim added merely to call attention to the preceding, and with no obvious special application. It is almost like our "verbum sap sat," and means, "You have now been fully warned." For the same characteristic method of capping the discussion with a sententious maxim, cf. 1<sup>18</sup> 2<sup>18</sup> 3<sup>18</sup>.

There is, however, a certain pointedness in v. 17 by reason of its relation to James's fundamental thought. "You Christians have in your knowledge of the law a privilege, and you value it (cf. the reliance on faith in 2<sup>14</sup> 2<sup>5</sup>); this should spur you to right action." Cf. Rom. 2<sup>17-20</sup>, of the requirement of conduct imposed on the Jews by their superior knowledge.

On αὐτῷ, cf. Clem. Rom. 44<sup>4</sup>, and the similar expression ἔστιν ἐν σοὶ ἀμαρτία, which is a standing phrase in Deut., e. g. 15<sup>9</sup> 23<sup>21 f.</sup> 24<sup>18</sup>.

CHAPTER V.

1-6. The practical neglect of God seen in the cruelty and luxury of the rich; and the appalling issue which awaits it.

1. ἄγε νῦν οἱ πλούσιοι, cf. on 4<sup>13</sup>.

οἱ πλούσιοι, cf. 1<sup>10 f.</sup> 2<sup>2-6</sup>. The chief question here is whether "the rich," who are attacked and warned, were Christians or not.

In 1<sup>10 f.</sup> the rich man referred to seems certainly to have been a Christian brother (see note); in 2<sup>2 f.</sup> the rich visitor is apparently not a Christian, so "the rich" of 2<sup>6</sup>. In the passage before us the rich as a class are apostrophised, without reference to their religious profession, in order to make clear to the Christian readers the folly of admiring or striving after riches. Those who possess riches, runs the argument, do not present an attractive example, so soon as the real character of their possessions and prospects is understood. Like pleasure (4<sup>1-10</sup>), so also wealth—which is sought after in order to gain pleasure—is a false aim. The tone is thus not of an appeal to evil-doers to reform (contrast 4<sup>7-10</sup> and even 4<sup>13-17</sup>), but of a threatening of judgment; and the attitude ascribed to the rich is that of 2<sup>6 f.</sup>, rather than of 1<sup>10 f.</sup>. Some of the rich may be Christians, but it is not as Christians that they are here addressed. The purpose of the verses is partly to dissuade the Christians from setting a high value on wealth, partly to give them a certain grim comfort in the hardships of poverty (cf. 5<sup>7-11</sup>).

in Wisd. 2, where the customary arrogance and selfishness of the rich, the transitoriness of their prosperity, and their treatment of the righteous are set forth. Lk. 6<sup>24</sup> f. also forms a close parallel. Cf. Enoch 94<sup>7-11</sup> 96<sup>4-8</sup> 97<sup>3-10</sup> 98<sup>4-18</sup> 99<sup>11-18</sup> 100<sup>4-13</sup> 103<sup>5-8</sup>.

The only important argument for supposing these "rich" to be Christians is that they are in form directly addressed. For a full statement of the arguments, see Zahn, Einleitung, i, § 4. But the form is the same as that of the prophetic denunciations of foreign nations, e. g. Is. 13<sup>1</sup> (Babylon), 15<sup>1</sup> (Moab); cf. Mt. 23 (the apostrophe against scribes and Pharisees), and the regular form of Biblical "Woes."

ὀλολύζω and ἀλαλάζω both mean "cry aloud" (onomatopoetic), and both refer in earlier secular Greek to joyful crying, or to a cry raised to the gods in worship, seldom to a mere wail of grief or pain.

In the LXX ὀλολύζω is the ordinary representative of הָיָה and means "howl," especially in distress or from repentance. It is used only in the prophetic books, and nearly always in the imperative.

ἀλαλάζω is the regular representative of Hebrew נָחַח, except in Jeremiah, where in all the four cases of its use, 4<sup>8</sup> 29 (47)<sup>3</sup> 30 (49)<sup>3</sup> 32<sup>20</sup>, it stands for הָיָה; cf. also ἀλαλαγμός, Jer. 20<sup>18</sup>, for נָחַח. It means "cry" —with joy, triumph, battle fury, by way of sounding alarm, or the like.

The reference found here by many older, and some more recent, commentators to the destruction of Jerusalem is wholly uncalled for; it is equally wrong to apply this to the distress preceding the Last Judgment; and still worse to think merely of the loss of property by the rich.

2-3. Your wealth is already, to any eye that can see realities, rotten, moth-eaten, and rusted. The rust of it will testify to you in the Day of Judgment how valueless it and your confidence in it are. And the worthlessness of your wealth will then be your ruin, for you have been storing up for yourselves only the fire of hell.

2. σέσηπεν, "has rotted," "is rotten," i. e. of no value. The word is here used to apply (literally or figuratively) to every kind of wealth.

On the general idea, cf. Mt. 6<sup>19</sup>. In James it is not the perishability but the worthlessness of wealth that is referred to. The property—no matter what its earthly value, or even its earthly chance of permanence—is worthless if measured by true standards.

This and the following verbs in the perfect tense (γέγονεν, κατέωται) are picturesque, figurative statements of the real worthlessness of this wealth to the view of one who knows how to estimate permanent, eternal values. The perfect tense is appropriately used of the present state of worthlessness.

Others take the perfect tense in these verbs as describing by prophetic anticipation (cf. Is. 60<sup>1</sup>) what will inevitably happen with the lapse of time. But this is unnecessary, and the change to the future in ἔσται makes it unlikely. Notice also that the mention of the "rusting" of gold and silver points to a figurative meaning.

The view taken of these perfects carries the decision for a series of exegetical problems in vv. 2, 3 which are discussed in detail in the notes.

A different view can be made clear by the following paraphrase, based on Huther's interpretation :

"Your wealth will all perish in the Day of Judgment. The rust of it will testify to you beforehand of your own coming destruction, and the Judgment, when it has destroyed your possessions, will afterwards fall on you. You have been amassing treasure in the very days of the Judgment itself!"

The idea that σάτηκεν κτλ. gives the first specification of the actual sin of the rich, who show their rapacity by treasuring up wealth and letting it rot instead of using it to give to the poor or as capital to promote useful industries ("Æcumenius," Calvin, Hornejus, Laurentius, Grotius, Bengel, Theile), is needless and far-fetched.

The word is found elsewhere in the Bible only in Job 13<sup>22</sup> ὡς ἱμάτιον σητόβρωτον. In secular Greek it has been observed only Orac. Sib. ap. Theoph. Ad Autol. ii, 36 (fragm. 3, l. 26), σητόβρωτα δέδορκε (of idol-images). Cf. Is. 51<sup>8</sup> 50<sup>9</sup>, Mic. 7<sup>4</sup> (LXX), Job 32<sup>11</sup> (LXX).

3. κατῶται, "rusted," "corroded." The preposition κατα-has a "perfective" force, almost like "rusted out," or "rusted through," cf. the only other Biblical instance, Ecclus. 12<sup>11</sup> εἰς τέλος κατῶσεν. Hence R.V. "utterly rusted." See J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 111 ff. The word is found in Epict. Diss. iv, 6<sup>14</sup>, but is rare.

In fact, silver does not easily corrode so as to become worthless (cf., however, Ecclus. 29<sup>11</sup> :), and gold not at all. On ancient knowledge of the freedom of gold from rust, see references in Wetstein. In the apparent references to the rusting of gold in Ep. Jer. 11 and 24, tarnishing is probably meant. But James's bold figure has nothing to do with such expressions. He means that even the most permanent earthly treasure has no lasting value. "Have rusted" is equivalent to "are worthless," and the writer is thinking of the present, although the present is illuminated by what he knows about the future.

Cf. Chaucer, Prologue to Canterbury Tales :

"And this figure he addide yit therto,

It is derived from an O. T. expression, found in Gen. 21<sup>22</sup> 31<sup>44</sup>, Deut. 31<sup>18</sup>. "Josh. 24<sup>27</sup>", in all which cases it represents שָׁמַיִם or הָאֵל, which means "to be a sign," or "pledge," or "symbol," usually with reference to some material object, a book, a stone, a group of animals. See also Job 16<sup>3</sup> (Job's sickness as μαρτύριον of his guilt), Mic. 1<sup>1</sup>. In Josh. 22<sup>27</sup>, "Josh. 24<sup>27</sup>", Ruth 4<sup>1</sup> μαρτύριον is used in a different grammatical relation but in the same sense. In 1 Sam. 9<sup>11</sup>, Prov. 29<sup>14</sup>, Hos. 2<sup>13</sup>, Mic. 7<sup>18</sup>, εἰς μαρτύριον is found, due to a mistranslation but probably intended by the translator in the same sense.

So here the rust is the visible sign and symbol of the real state of the case—of the perishability of riches and hence of the certain ruin awaiting those who have no other ground of hope.

Others take εἰς μαρτύριον to mean "for witness of your rapacity" (see above on σέσηπεν) or "of your own coming destruction." The latter view corresponds with that which takes the perfects σέσηπεν καὶ λ. in a future sense as prophetic of the Judgment.

This is better suited to the context than "against you," vis. in the judicial process of the Last Day. Cf. Enoch 96<sup>4</sup> for parallel to this latter.

φάγεται τὰς σάρκας ὑμῶν, "shall consume your fleshly parts," i. e. "the perishability of your riches will be your ruin," "you and your riches will perish together." The idea is of rust corroding, and so consuming, human flesh, like the wearing into the flesh of a rusty iron chain—a terrible image for the disastrous results of treating money as the reliance and the chief aim of life. For a somewhat similar turn, cf. Eccles. 34(31)<sup>5</sup>.

φάγεται is used as future of ἐσθίω in LXX and N. T.

ὥς πῦρ ἐθησαυρίσατε, "since you have stored up fire," i. e. the fire of Gehenna. There is a play in the word ἐθησαυρίσατε (cf. vv. 21.), as in Mt. 6<sup>19</sup>; cf. a curiously similar play in Ecclus. 29<sup>11</sup>. Prov. 16<sup>27</sup> ἀνὴρ ἄφρων ὀρύσσει ἑαυτῷ κακὰ, ἐπὶ δὲ τῶν ἑαυτοῦ χειλέων θησαυρίζει πῦρ. On the fire of hell, cf. Is. 30<sup>33</sup>, Judith 16<sup>17</sup>, Mt. 5<sup>22</sup>, and see P. Volz, Jüdische Eschatologie, pp. 280 f. 285 f.; W. Bousset, Die Religion des Judentums<sup>2</sup>, p. 320.

On ὥς with the meaning "since," see Lex. s. v., I, 4, b. (not quite adequate), L. and S. s. v., B, IV.

(1) With the punctuation, as above, by which ὡς κύρ is connected with the following, ὡς can be taken in the sense, "as," "as it were." But this is less forcible, since the writer who wrote the preceding and following denunciation would not be likely to hold back from the out-and-out threat of "fire."

(2) ὡς κύρ can be connected with the preceding sentence, and ἐθησαυρίζετε made to begin a new sentence (so A.V., R.V., WH. mg., following Old Latin and Vg). In that case we must read: "The rust of them will be for a witness and will eat your flesh like fire. You have laid up treasure in the Last Days," etc. This makes a fairly suitable context for ὡς κύρ. But the following sentence is left mutilated, for ἐθησαυρίζετε requires an object; and the sense is weakened. Under this interpretation the "Last Days" have to be understood as already here.

4. As an example of the way in which the rich have been treasuring up fire for themselves, James specifies injustice to farm labourers, a conspicuous form of oppression from early O. T. times down. Cf. also v. 6. Hermas, Vis. iii, 9<sup>6</sup>, has many points of similarity.

κυρίου σαβαώθ, "Lord of Sabaoth," "Lord of Hosts," יהוה צבאות. This term originally referred to Jahveh as the god of the armies of Israel, then as ruler of the "hosts of heaven," i. e. the stars and heavenly powers. In LXX usually represented by παντοκράτωρ (see Lex. s. v.), but in all cases in Isaiah and in nine others transliterated, as here and Rom. 9<sup>20</sup>. See HDB, "Lord of Hosts," EB, "Names," Smith, DB, "Sabaoth," Sanday on Rom. 9<sup>20</sup>. The term is here used (after Is. 5<sup>9</sup>) to suggest the almighty power and majesty of Him who will make the cause of the labourers his own, so in 3 Macc. 6<sup>17</sup><sup>11</sup>.

5. Your luxurious life on this earth is nothing in which you can take satisfaction, it is but the preliminary to a day of punishment.

Cf. Lk. 16<sup>18-21</sup> (Dives and Lazarus), Lk. 6<sup>24</sup><sup>11</sup>. 12<sup>18-21</sup>. Cf. Enoch 98<sup>11</sup> 102<sup>9</sup>.

ἐτρυφήσατε, "you have lived in luxury," "lived delicately" (R.V.). Derived from θρύπτω, to "break down," "enervate"; it denotes soft luxury, not necessarily wanton vice. Cf. Neh. 9<sup>28</sup> καὶ ἐφάγασαν καὶ ἐνεπλήσθησαν καὶ ἐλιπάνθησαν καὶ ἐτρυφήσαν, Eccclus. 14<sup>4</sup>; and for τρυφή Lk. 7<sup>28</sup>, 2 Pet. 2<sup>18</sup>, Eccclus. 14<sup>18</sup>. Cf. Hermas, Sim. vi, 1<sup>6</sup> τρυφῶντα ἦν καὶ λίαν σπαταλῶντα, Lk. 16<sup>19</sup> εὐφραυνόμενος καθ' ἡμέραν λαμπρῶς.

The aorist is "constative" or summary (cf. J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 109), and is properly translated by the English perfect (A.V., R.V.).

ἐσπαταλήσατε, "given yourselves to pleasure." R.V. "taken your pleasure" is weaker than the original, and not so good as the antiquated "been wanton" of A.V. Cf. 1 Tim. 5<sup>8</sup>, Eccclus. 21<sup>18</sup>.

σπαταλᾶν is a less literary word than τρυφᾶν, having worse associations in secular use, and suggesting positive lewdness and riotousness. This word and its cognates, σπαταλός, σπατάλη, κατασπαταλᾶν, are each used a few times in LXX, Sym. and "alii." Cf. Barn. 10<sup>8</sup>, Varro ap. Non. p. 46. 12 spatula eviravit omnes Veneri vaga pueros. Hort, pp. 107-109, assembles many instances of the word from the LXX and other sources.

ἐθρέψατε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς, "you have fattened your hearts for the day of slaughter." This declares, with a hard, ironical turn, what has been the real nature of the τρυφᾶν and σπαταλᾶν, the life of luxurious pleasure; it is merely a fattening of the ox that he may be fit for slaughter.

ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς, "for (i. e. so as to be fat in) the day of slaughter." On this use of ἐν, cf. 1 Thess. 3<sup>18</sup>. The rendering of A.V., R.V., "a day of slaughter," is wrong, cf. Rom. 2<sup>8</sup>, 1 Pet. 2<sup>12</sup>. The article is omitted, as often in compact prepositional expressions, Blass-Debrunner, § 255. Cf. Jer. 12<sup>8</sup> ἄθροισον αὐτοὺς ὡς πρόβατα εἰς σφαγὴν, ἄγνισον αὐτοὺς εἰς ἡμέραν σφαγῆς αὐτῶν, 50<sup>27</sup>, Is. 34<sup>2</sup>, Ezek. 21<sup>18</sup>, Ps. 44<sup>22</sup>, Orac. Sib. v, 377-380. The Day of Judgment is meant. Cf. Enoch 94<sup>9</sup>, "Ye have become ready for the day of slaughter," 98<sup>10</sup> 99<sup>8</sup>, Jer. 25<sup>24</sup>.

Many interpreters think that ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς must refer to the time in which ἐθρέψατε has been going on. Then the sense will be: "You have been occupied with pampering yourselves in the very day when you will be finally cut off." But this is unnecessary, and the words become less pregnant and significant, while it is not natural to speak of the present time as if the Day of Judgment itself (near though it may be) had already come.

A's reading is unsupported error. The prefixing of ὥς changes and weakens the sense because of failure to note the allusion to the Day of Judgment in ἡμέρα σαργῆς. This reading with ὥς is correctly enough paraphrased by aeth (ed. Platt) ut qui saginat bovem in diem mactationis.

6. By your oppression you are guilty of the blood of righteous men; do you not find them your enemies?

ἄρτος ἐπιδομένων ζωῇ πτωχῶν,
ὁ ἀποστερῶν αὐτὴν ἀνθρωπίνων αἱμάτων.
φονεύων τὸν πλησίον ὁ ἀφαιρούμενος συμβλῶσιν, καὶ ἐκχέων αἷμα ὁ ἀποστερῶν μισθὸν μισθίου.

Here, however, every kind of cruel conduct leading to the death of the poor and righteous is doubtless meant, including in some cases actual murder—whether violent or judicial (e. g. the execution of Stephen).

In Lk. 23<sup>47</sup>, Acts 3<sup>14</sup> 7<sup>32</sup> 22<sup>14</sup>, 1 Jn. 2<sup>1</sup> (cf. 1 Pet. 3<sup>18</sup>), ὁ δίκαιος is used of Christ, cf. Enoch 38<sup>1</sup> 53<sup>4</sup>. It is not, however, likely that Christ would here be referred to so vaguely, although his death might naturally be included in the writer's mind under ἐπονοεύσας. The attack is upon the rich as a class, and their misdeeds are thought of as characterising their whole history. Mt. 23<sup>11</sup> is an excellent parallel; cf. also the reproaches in Acts 7<sup>11-13</sup>.

In Hos. 1<sup>4</sup> ἀντιτάσσεσθαι is contrasted with ἐλάσθαι, to "show mercy"; in Prov. 3<sup>34</sup> with διδόναι χάριν, "be favourably inclined." It seems to be used of active opposition or resistance, not of a merely hostile attitude. So Esther 3<sup>4</sup>, Prov. 3<sup>18</sup>, 4 Macc. 16<sup>11</sup> (Cod. N).

Other interpretations of v. 9 are to be rejected:

(1) If, with many interpreters, οὐκ ἀντιτάσσεται is taken as a positive statement instead of a question, it must probably refer to the deliberate non-resistance of the righteous on principle, as in Is. 53<sup>7</sup>, 1 Pet. 2<sup>23</sup>. But (a) this sense is wholly unsuited to the context, (b) the asyndeton after δίκαιον then becomes well-nigh impossibly violent, and (c) to end this powerful passage of triumphant denunciation with a brief reference to the submissive non-resistance of the righteous would be strange indeed.

(2) For this last reason the view that the meaning is, "he offers you no effective resistance," is almost equally unacceptable.

(3) Hofmann and others take ἀντιτάσσεται as impersonal passive, "no opposition is made," cf. v. 11. But (Mayor) "it is the middle, not the active, which means to resist."

(4) Some interpreters would supply ὁ θεός as the subject of ἀντιτάσσεται, taking the latter interrogatively. This would be in accord with the Jewish avoidance of the name of God wherever possible, and would form an allusion to 4<sup>6</sup>; but it seems here unnecessary and unnatural.

In the interest of this last interpretation Bentley conjectured ΟΚΚ for ΟΥΚ; like most N. T. conjectures, it is unnecessary.

(5) By those who take τὸν δίκαιον to refer to Jesus Christ, οὐκ ἀντιτάσσεται is interpreted either interrogatively, as a warning of the Day of Judgment (cf. Mt. 25<sup>11</sup>'), or affirmatively, in the light of 1 Pet. 2<sup>23</sup>.

7-11. Encouragement to patience, and constancy, and to mutual forbearance, in view of the certainty and nearness of the Com-

With v. 7 begin the Counsels for the Christian Conduct of Life, which occupy the rest of the chapter and are contrasted with the censure of Worldliness in 4<sup>1-5</sup>.

7. μακροθυμήσατε, "be patient." This word has more the meaning of patient and submissive, ὑπομένειν that of steadfast and constant, endurance. But the two words are nearly synonymous. Cf. 1<sup>8 f. 13</sup> 5<sup>11</sup>, Col. 1<sup>11</sup> 3<sup>13</sup> (with Lightfoot's notes), 1 Cor. 13<sup>4, 7</sup>, 2 Cor. 6<sup>4, 8</sup>, Heb. 6<sup>11 f. 15</sup>, 2 Tim. 3<sup>11</sup>. See Trench, Synonyms, § liii.

Enoch 96<sup>1, 3</sup> 97<sup>1-2</sup> 103<sup>1-5</sup> are good parallels, combined, as they are, with the series of Woes to which vv. 1-6 are so closely similar.

It is to be noted that the evil and hardship which are to be borne with patience, and which call out groans (v. 9), are not necessarily persecution, or unjust oppression, but may well be merely the privations, anxieties, and sufferings incident to the ordinary life of men. Note the reference to the example of Job (whose misfortunes were grievous sickness and the loss of children and property), and the special precepts about conduct in sickness, vv. 14<sup>11</sup>. Notice also κακοπαθεῖ, v. 13, a general word for being in trouble.

The word παρουσία is found but five times in the LXX (Neh. 2<sup>a</sup> (Cod. A), Judith 10<sup>aa</sup>, 2 Macc. 8<sup>11</sup> 15<sup>21</sup>, 3 Macc. 3<sup>17</sup>), and until the N. T. we do not find it used with reference to the Messiah at all. Nor does God's coming to redemption and judgment appear to be referred to in Jewish sources by this term. Its natural associations in such use are with the "advent," or visit (παρουσία), of Greek kings to the cities of their realm; cf. Deissmann, Licht vom Osten<sup>1</sup>, pp. 278 ff., Light from the Ancient East, pp. 372 ff., and especially Brooke's full note on 1 Jn. 2<sup>12</sup>.

Test. XII Patr. Jud. 22<sup>a</sup>, ἕως τῆς παρουσίας θεοῦ τῆς δικαιοσύνης is probably a Christian addition; it is not found in the Armenian version. It refers to Christ with the naïve patripassianism characteristic of these interpolations. The quotations given by Spitta (p. 137) from the Testament of Abraham are of Christian origin, and refer to the παρουσία of Christ (cf. Schürer, GJV, § 32, V, 6).

"The farmer has to wait, and to be patient"; a comparison used as an argument, and introduced abruptly, as in 2<sup>15</sup> 3<sup>4</sup>.<sup>1</sup> This comparison does not bear any special relation to the occupation of the readers. ὁ γεωργός refers to the independent farmer, not to the ἐργάτης.

We are here reminded of the parables of the Gospels, where the consummation of all things is repeatedly compared to a harvest, e. g. Mt. 13<sup>30</sup>; cf. also Eccus. 6<sup>11</sup>, Ps. 126<sup>1</sup>.<sup>1</sup> For the thought, cf. (Wetstein) Tibullus, ii, 6. 21 f. and the apocryphal fragment quoted in Clem. Rom. 23<sup>1-4</sup> and 2 Clem. Rom. 11<sup>1-4</sup>.

τὸν τίμιον καρπὸν, "the precious crop" for which he longs. τίμιος is added in order to make the comparison complete.

The shortest reading is to be preferred; the others represent two different methods of completing a supposedly defective text. It should be stated that B<sup>1</sup>KL minn<sup>plar</sup> read πρόϊμον, the more usual form of the word.

Another possibility would be that the Syrian reading with ὕερόν, which clearly gives the best sense, is original; and either (1) that ὕερόν was accidentally omitted, so as to produce the text of B, and by a secondary conjecture (καρπών) that of ℔, or else (2) that for ὕερόν, not understood outside of Palestine and Syria, καρπών was directly substituted, so that the editor of the text of B, having to choose between two rival readings, cut the knot by refusing to accept either. But against this stands the weight of the external testimony to the omission, together with the argument from the shorter reading. In any case the reading καρπών is secondary.

To fill the ellipsis, καρπών is sometimes supplied from the preceding (so many interpreters from Cassiodorus to Spitta), and then the reference will perhaps be to the succession of barley and wheat, Ex. 9<sup>11</sup> 1.; cf. Stephanus, Thesaur. s. v. πρώϊμος; Geoponica, i, 12<sup>11</sup>, 11, with similar distinction of οἱ πρώϊμοι καρποὶ καὶ οἱ ὕψιμοι . . . οἱ δὲ μέσοι; Xen. Œc. 17<sup>1</sup>.

The sentence would then mean, "until he receive it early and late," and would emphasise the continuance of the farmer's anxiety until all the harvests are complete. But this does not well suit the comparison with the Parousia, where it is the event itself, not the completion of a series of processes, that is significant. Moreover, the O. T. parallels tell strongly against this interpretation, and there is no evidence that such a distinction had any place in popular usage.

The use of these terms for the two critical periods of rain is found in Deut. 11<sup>14</sup>, Jer. 5<sup>24</sup>, Joel 2<sup>23</sup>, Zech. 10<sup>1</sup> (LXX); cf. Jer. 3<sup>3</sup>, Hos. 6<sup>3</sup>. The comparison is drawn from a matter of intense interest, an habitual subject of conversation, in Palestine.

The "early rain" normally begins in Palestine in late October or early November, and is anxiously awaited because, being necessary for the germination of the seed, it is the signal for sowing. In the spring the maturing of the grain depends on the "late rain," light showers falling in April and May. Without these even heavy winter rains will not prevent failure of the crops. Thus the farmer is anxious, and must exercise μακροθυμία, until both these necessary gifts of Heaven are assured.

guished from other portions of the subtropical region of the Mediterranean basin. Elsewhere, although the dry season and rainy season are quite as well marked, the critical fall and spring months are pretty certain to secure a sufficient rainfall, as in Italy, or else there is no hope of rain in them, as in northern Egypt in the spring. But in Syria these rains are usual yet by no means uniform or certain; hence only there do they take so prominent a place in the life and thought of everybody. See J. Hann, Handbuch der Klimatologie<sup>3</sup>, iii, 1911, pp. 90-96, especially the instructive tables, pp. 12 f., 93; H. Hilderscheid, "Die Niederschlagsverhältnisse Palästinas in alter und neuer Zeit," in Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästinavereins, xxv, 1902, especially pp. 82-94; E. Huntington, Palestine and Its Transformation, 1911; EB, "Rain."

It is instructive to observe that the v. l. ὑετός belongs to the "Syrian" (Antiochian) text, the framers of which were familiar with a similar climate, while in Egypt καρπών (ḥ boh, etc.) or else the shorter reading with no noun at all (B sah) was prevalent. The reading καρπών (or the corresponding interpretation) was likewise natural from the point of view of Italy and the western Mediterranean (ff Cassiodorus).

The question arises whether this may be a purely literary allusion, drawn from the O. T. passages and made without any personal knowledge of these rains and their importance. That is made unlikely by the absence of any other relation here (apart from the names of the two rains) to the language or thought of any one of the O. T. passages. The author uses a current phrase as if he were himself familiar with the matter in question. To suppose that to him and his readers this was a mere Biblical allusion to a situation of which they knew only by literary study would give a formal stiffness and unreality to the passage wholly out of keeping with the intensity and sincerity of the writer's appeal.

The resemblance here to the O. T. is in fact less close than to the tract Taanith of the Mishna, where the date is discussed at which, if rain have not yet begun, it should be prayed for. The tract shows in many ways how deeply these seasons of rain entered into all the life of the people. See also JE, "Rain."

9. μὴ στενάζετε κατ' ἀλλήλων, "do not groan against one another." στενάζειν does not mean "murmur," but "groan," "complain of distress," cf. Heb. 13<sup>17</sup>. It is frequently used in the LXX for the utterance of various kinds of pain and grief.

The more emphatic words here are κατ' ἀλλήλων, and the sentence means: "Do not blame one another for the distress of the present soon-to-be-ended age." This, it is pointed out, is both wicked (ἵνα μὴ κριθῇτε) and needless (ἰδοὺ ὁ κριτὴς πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν ἔστηκεν). We ought to cultivate patience in general, and we ought not to blame one another for our unmerited distress, for we should recognise that it is part of the inevitable and temporary evil of the present age.

The translation "grudge" (A.V.) means "complain"; cf. Ps. 59<sup>14</sup> (A.V.), Shakespeare, 1. Henry VI, iii, 1, 176.

ἵνα μὴ κριθῇτε. They are themselves in danger of judgment, if they commit the sin of complaining of their brethren. Cf. 2<sup>12</sup> 4<sup>12</sup> 5<sup>12</sup>, also Mt. 7<sup>1</sup> (but there is here in James nothing of the idea that judging brings Judgment). As in 4<sup>12</sup>, so probably here, God is the judge, and with the coming of the Lord (i. e. Christ), v. 7, God's judgment appears; cf. Rom. 2<sup>16</sup>.

The sentence means hardly more than "for that is wrong," cf. v. 12.

This virtue was seen in Job's refusal to renounce God, Job 1<sup>21</sup> f. 2<sup>9</sup> f. 13<sup>15</sup> 16<sup>19</sup> 19<sup>25</sup> f. It had evidently already become a standing attribute of Job in the popular mind; in Tanchuma, 29. 4 (Schöttgen, Horae hebraicae, pp. 1009 f.) Job is given as an example of steadfastness in trial and of the double reward which that receives. Cf. Clem. Rom. 17<sup>3</sup> 26<sup>3</sup>, 2 Clem. Rom. 6<sup>3</sup>; this verse is the only mention of Job in the N. T., and has doubtless given rise to the modern saying, "as patient as Job."

ἡκούσατε. Perhaps in the synagogue; cf. Mt. 5<sup>21</sup>, 27, 28, 28, 42.

τὸ τέλος κυρίου is taken by Augustine, Bede, and many later interpreters to mean the death of Christ. But in that case not the mere death, but the triumph over death, would have had to be made prominent. The suggestion is at variance both with what precedes and with what follows; and the death of Christ is not likely to be introduced so ambiguously. "If τέλος is supposed to refer to the Resurrection and Ascension, the main point of the comparison (suffering) is omitted: if it refers to the Crucifixion, the encouragement is wanting" (Mayor).

Cf. Ps. 103<sup>8</sup> (note v. 9 οὐκ εἰς τέλος ὀργισθήσεται), III<sup>4</sup> 145<sup>8</sup>, Ex. 34<sup>6</sup>, Ecclus. 27<sup>11</sup>, Ps. Sol. 10<sup>8</sup>, Test. XII Patr. Jud. 19<sup>3</sup>, Zab. 9<sup>7</sup>.

πολύσπλαγχνος means "very kind." Apart from far later Christian use (e. g. Theod. Stud. p. 615, eighth century) it is elsewhere found only in Hermas, Sim. v, 7<sup>4</sup>, Mand. iv, 3. Cf. πολυσπλαγχνία, Hermas, Vis. i, 3<sup>1</sup>, ii, 2<sup>3</sup>, iv, 2<sup>3</sup>, Mand. ix, 2, Justin Mart. Dial. 55; πολυεσπλαγχνος, Hermas, Sim. v, 4<sup>4</sup>; πολυεσπλαγχνία, Hermas, Sim. viii, 6<sup>1</sup>.

It seems to be equivalent to LXX πολυέλεος. Like other words from σπλάγχνα (σπῆρ) it must be of Jewish origin. This group of words is rather more strongly represented in the N. T. than in the LXX, and seems to have come into free popular use in the intervening period.

οἰκτῖρμων, "merciful." In classical Greek only a poetic term for the more common ἐλεήμων (Schmidt, Synonymik der griech. Sprache, iii, p. 580). Frequent in the LXX for יְהוָה; nearly always used of God; in the majority of cases combined with ἐλεήμων. Cf. Lk. 6<sup>26</sup>.

12-18. Do not break out into oaths. Instead, if in distress, pray; if well off, sing a psalm to God; if sick, ask for prayer and anointing, and confess your sins. Prayer is a mighty power; remember Elijah's prayer.

The exhortation relating to oaths appears to be parallel with μὴ στενάζετε. "Do not put the blame for your hardships on your brethren: do not irreverently call upon God in your distress." Vv. 12-18 all relate to the religious expression of strong emotion.

12. πρὸ πάντων δέ, "but especially," emphasising this as even more important than μὴ στενάζετε.

μὴ ὀμνύετε. A reminiscence of Mt. 5<sup>34-37</sup> (note especially v. 37 and the reference to οὐρανός and γῆ in vv. 34 f.).

ἦτω, for ἔστω. See references in Lex. and Winer-Schmiedel, § 14. 1, note; also Mayor's note, p. 167, J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, p. 56.

ἦτω δὲ ὑμῶν τὸ ναὶ ναί, "let your yea be yea" (and nothing more).

This is simpler, and in every way better, than to translate, "Let yours be the 'Yea, yea,'" i. e. the mode of speech commanded by the Lord in Mt. 5<sup>37</sup>.

It is not to be supposed that James had in mind any question of the lawfulness of oaths in a law-court in a Jewish or Christian country. To any oriental such a saying as this, or Mt. 5<sup>37</sup>, would at once suggest ordinary swearing, not the rare and solemn occasions about which modern readers have been so much concerned.

The commentators are divided on this point. Huther (Beyschlag) names many who hold that James meant to forbid all oaths, but a still larger number who think that only frivolous swearing was in his mind. Huther's own argument is that if he had meant to forbid serious oaths he would have had to mention explicitly the oath by the name of God.

The form here differs from that of the saying in Mt. 5<sup>37</sup> ἔστω δὲ ὁ λόγος ὑμῶν ναὶ ναί, and it is a singular fact that the words of Jesus are quoted substantially in the form found in James by many early writers, including Justin Martyr, Apol. i, 16, Clem. Alex. Strom. v, 14, 99, p. 707, vii, 11, 67, p. 872.

The form in James is simpler and seems to correspond to a current Jewish mode of describing truthfulness. Similar language is found in Ruth rabba 3, 18, "With the righteous is their 'yes,' yes, and their 'no,' no," ascribed to R. Huna († 297 A.D.), quoting his contemporary R. Samuel bar-Isaac, and doubtless independent of the N. T.

The fact probably is that at an early date the text of Mt. 5<sup>37</sup> was in the East either modified or misquoted by the influence of the more familiar current phrase, which also appears in James. In the later quotations, however, direct influence from Jas. 5<sup>12</sup> is very likely to have come in. The theory that we have here in James and in these early writers the traces of an oral form of the sayings of Jesus preserved independently of Matthew's Greek gospel is unlikely, and unnecessary. For a convenient presentation of the facts, see A. Resch, Aussercanonische Paralleltexte zu den Evangelien, ii, Matthaeus und Marcus, 1894 (Texte und Unters. x), pp. 96 f.

The commonness of oaths (often half-serious, half-profane) in daily speech in the ancient world, both Jewish and Gentile, does not need to be illustrated, cf. Eccles. 9<sup>1</sup>. The censure of the moralists seems to have proceeded both from the tendency to untruthfulness which made an oath seem needed (and which it intensified), from the dishonest distinctions between the valid and the invalid oath, and from the irreverence of profanity (Philo, De decal. 19 εἴεται γὰρ ἐκ πολυορκίας ψευδοξία καὶ δόξηα). To these motives should be added the dread among the Greeks of an oath which might commit to unexpected obligations perhaps tragic in their result.

From Jewish sources there are consequently many sayings recommending either complete abstinence from swearing or at least the greatest possible restriction of the custom. Thus Ecclus. 23<sup>a-11</sup> 27<sup>14</sup>. Philo discusses oaths in De decal. 17-19, and De spec. leg. ii, 1-6. His principle is that oaths are to be avoided when possible, that oaths should be taken by lower objects ("the earth, the sun, the stars, the universe") rather than by "the highest and eldest Cause," and he praises the man who by any evasion (cf. English, "Oh My!") avoids the utterance of the sacred words of oaths. His abhorrence of oaths is due to their profane impiety and unseemliness, but he also lays stress on truthfulness and on the wickedness of false swearing and of swearing to do wrong.

Rabbinical teaching was to much the same effect, with varying degrees of rigour. Nedarim 20 a, "Accustom not thyself to vows, for sooner or later thou wilt swear false oaths"; Midrash Bemidbar r. 22, "Not even to confirm the truth is it proper for one to swear, lest he come to trifle with vows and swearing, and deceive his neighbour by oaths"; Midrash Wajjikra r. 6 (cf. Shebuoth 47 a), where all swearing is forbidden. See A. Wünsche, Neue Beiträge zur Erläuterung der Evangelien aus Talmud und Midrasch, 1878, pp. 57-60, and E. Bischoff, Jesus und die Rabbinen, 1905, pp. 54-56.

In particular the Essenes refrained from oaths; Josephus, BJ, ii, 8<sup>o</sup>: "Every statement of theirs is surer than an oath; and with them swearing is avoided, for they think it worse than perjury. For they say that he who is untrustworthy except when he appeals to God, is already under condemnation," cf. Ant. xv, 10<sup>4</sup>. Philo, Quod omn. prob. liber, 12, mentions among the doctrines of the Essenes τὸ ἀνώμοτον, τὸ ἀφευδές.

Similar reasons led to the discouragement of oaths by Greek moralists. Pythagoras himself is said (Diog. Laert. Pythag. 22, Jamblichus, Vita Pythag. 9 and 28) to have taught μηδ' ὀμνῶναι θεούς, ἀσχεῖν γὰρ αὐτὸν δεῖν ἀξιόπιστον παρέχειν, and this was certainly a principle of the Pythagoreans. See also Diodor. Sic. x, fragm. 9<sup>1</sup>.

From the Stoic side comes the saying of Epictetus, Enchir. 33<sup>1</sup>, ὅρκον παραιτησάι, εἰ μὲν οἶόν τε, εἰς ἄπαν, εἰ δὲ μή, ἐκ τῶν ἐνόητων, and that of the Stoically influenced Eusebius, in Stobæus, Anthol. iii, 27, 13 οἱ πολλοὶ τοῖς ἀνθρώποισι τὸ εὐόρκους εἶναι αὐτοῖς παραινέουσιν, ἐγὼ δὲ καὶ τὸ ἀρχὴν μηδ' εὐπετίως ὀμνῶναι θάσιον ἀποφαίνομαι.

For other Greek sayings, cf. Chærilus of Samos (fourth century B.C.), ὅρκον δ' οὐτ' ἄδικον χρῶν ὀμνῶναι οὔτε δίκαιον (in Stobæus, Anthol. iii, 27, 1); Menander, Sent. sing. 441 ὅρκον δὲ φεύγε καὶ δικαίως κἀδικῶς; the statement of Nicolaus Damascenus (*Stob. With early Christian writers the objection to oaths was further increased by reason of the necessary association with heathen worship and formulas. The subject is discussed by Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, Chrysostom, Augustine. See references in Mayor, K. F. Stäudlin, Geschichte der Vorstellungen und Lehren vom Eide, 1824, "Oaths," in DCA.

The solemn visit here described gives a vivid picture of the customs of a Jewish town. James recommends it not as anything new, nor as excluding all other therapeutic methods. Visiting the sick (cf. Schechter, Studies in Judaism, second series, Philadelphia, 1908, pp. 99 f. and note 42, p. 311.

The following interesting passages have been brought to the attention of N. T. scholars by the aid of Dr. S. Schechter (see Fulford, St. James, pp. 117 f.): Samachoth Zutarti (ed. Chaim M. Horowitz, Uralte Tosefta's, Mainz, 1890, pp. 28-31), "From the time when a man takes to his bed, they come to him and say, 'Words neither revive one, nor do they kill.' [After exhorting the sick man to set his worldly affairs in order, as Isaiah did Hezekiah, 2 Kings 20<sup>1</sup>, if he sees that the sick man is dangerously ill, the visitor says], 'Confess before thou diest, for there are many who have confessed and died not; others who did not confess have died. Again perhaps on the merit of thy confession thou wilt recover.' If he can confess with his mouth, he does so. If not, he confesses in his heart. Both the man who confesses with his mouth and the man who confesses in his heart are alike, provided that he directs his mind to God and his understanding is clear." T. B. Shabbath 13 b, "He who comes to a sick man says, 'May the Lord have mercy on you.'" "He who comes to pay a visit to a sick man must not sit on a bed or on a chair; but let him wrap his mantle round him, and pray the mercy of God for the man. There is a divine presence at the head of the sick man."

Closely like the verse in James is Baba bathra 116 a, "Let him into whose house calamity or sickness has come, go to a wise man (i. e. a rabbi) that he may intercede for him with God."

ἀλείψαντες ἐλαίῳ, cf. Mk. 6<sup>13</sup>.

The aorist participle does not imply that the anointing is to precede the prayer; cf. Burton, Moods and Tenses, §§ 139-141; Blass-Debrunner, § 339; Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 130-132.

The Jews, as well as other ancient peoples, used oil as a common remedial agent. In many cases, doubtless, the application had therapeutic value; often, however, in the lack of scientific knowledge it must (like many other remedies, ancient and modern) have owed its efficacy wholly to influence on the patient's mind. Cf. Is. 1<sup>4</sup>, Lk. 10<sup>4</sup>, and the evidence collected by Mayor; and see "Oil" and "Anointing," in EB, and HDB. Galen, Med. temp. ii, calls oil "The best of all remedies for paralysis (τοῖς ἐξηραμμένοις καὶ ἀδύμωδαι σῶμασιν)."

Talm. Jerus. in Berakoth 3. 1, "R. Simeon, the son of Eleazar, permitted R. Meir to mingle wine and oil and to anoint the sick on the Sabbath. And he was once sick, and we sought to do so to him, but he suffered us not." Talm. Jerus. in Maasar Sheni 53. 3, "A tradition: Anointing on the Sabbath is permitted. If his head ache, or if a scall comes upon it, he anoints it with oil." Talm. Bab. in Joma 77. 2, "If he be sick, or scall be upon his head, he anoints according to his manner." Talm. Jerus. in Shab. 14. 3, "A man that one charmeth, he putteth oil upon his head and charmeth."

With these Jewish ideas may be compared the notion of the oil which flows from the tree of life in paradise and bestows physical and spiritual blessings (Apoc. Mos. 9, Vita Adae et Evae 36, Evang. Nicod. 19).

This use of oil for healing was combined with the appeal to spiritual forces, as we can see in Jas. 5<sup>14</sup> and as is hinted in Mk. 6<sup>13</sup>. The reference in James is to an accepted popular custom, and the writer would hardly have been able to distinguish the parts played in the recovery by the two elements, or perhaps even to give any theory of the function of the oil. It is possible, as has often been suggested, that one motive for James's exhortation is to counteract the habit of seeking aid from superstitious, often heathenish, incantations and charms. The verse is often quoted to that end by later Christian writers (see references infra).

The same therapeutic use of oil (oleum infirmorum) in combination with religious rites continued in the earlier centuries of the Christian era, and is there, as among the Hebrews, carefully to be distinguished from that anointing (oleum catechumenorum, chrisma principale, etc.) which was the symbol of the conveyance of a character or grace.

The story told by Tertullian (Ad Scapulam, 4) is often quoted:

"Even Severus himself, the father of Antoninus, was graciously mindful of the Christians; for he sought out the Christian Proculus, surnamed Torpacian, the steward of Euhodias, and, in gratitude for his having once cured him by anointing, he kept him in his palace till the day of his death."

Besides this case Puller, Anointing of the Sick, has collected a large number of narratives of cures through the administration of holy oil, written at various dates from the third to the seventh century, and attested by contemporary or nearly contemporary evidence. Many of them are cases of paralysis or blindness, and may well have been of an hysterical nature (see P. Janet, The Major Symptoms of Hysteria, 1907). During this period of church history it does not appear that the therapeutic anointing with oil was generally thought of as also having spiritual efficacy. Origen, Hom. ii in Levit. 4, uses the passage in James to illustrate the remission of sin through penitence, but seems to pay no attention to the reference to anointing. Likewise Chrysostom, De sacerdot. iii, 6, quotes James to prove the authority of priests to forgive sins, but seems to take no thought of the anointing. Other writers also make it plain that they think of the oil merely as a means of securing bodily health.

The value in the Christian church of such a popular substitute for pagan magic was felt at this time. Cyril of Alexandria, De adorat. in spir. et ver. vi, p. 211, urges his readers to avoid the charms and incantations of magicians, and fittingly quotes Jas. 5<sup>13-14</sup>, and likewise Caesarius of Arles more than once quotes the verses on occasions when he is warning his people against the common recourse to sorcerers and superstitions, instead of which he recommends the consecrated oil. Cf. Append. serm. S. Augustini, serm. 265, 3, Migne, vol. xxxix, col. 2238, and serm. 279, 5, col. 2273; also the Venerable Bede, Exposit. super ds. Jacob. epist., Migne, vol. xciii, col. 39.

From the fourth century on there are Greek and other oriental liturgies containing forms for blessing the holy oil, for instance in one of the oldest, the Sacramentary of St. Serapion (fourth century, Egypt), ed. Brightman, Journal of Theol. Studies, i, 1899-1900, pp. 108, 267 f.

The Latin forms are to the same effect. During these centuries the therapeutic use of oil consecrated by a bishop or a priest or a wonder-working saint was permitted to any person without distinction. The letter of Pope Innocent I to Decentius (Ep. 25, 8, Migne, vol. xx, cols. 560 f.), dated March 19, 416, says that sick believers "have the right to be anointed with the holy oil of chrism, which, being consecrated by the bishop, it is lawful not for the priests only, but for all Christians to use for anointing in case of their own need or that of members of their household."

Before the end of the eighth century, however, a change came about in the West, whereby the use of oil was transformed into an anointing of those about to die, not as a means to their recovery, but with a view to the remission of their sins, and in connection with the giving of the viaticum. How far the change in the church may have been influenced by coexisting popular customs and ideas, which now forced themselves into legitimate usage, is not known. For instance, Ire-næus, i, 21<sup>1</sup>, says that the gnostic Marcosii anointed the dying with oil and water as a protection of their souls against the hostile powers of the spirit-world.

In any case this history shows the transformation of a widespread popular practise, having religious associations but purely medicinal aims, into a strictly religious rite, limited to priestly administration and carefully ordered with fixed forms and established rules. The withdrawal of the rite from the sphere of popular medicine was doubtless fundamentally due to the advancing control of rational intelligence in the affairs of the church and to a sound progress in religious conceptions. It was felt that religious observances should have a spiritual purpose. But by retaining the physical element, and ascribing to it spiritual efficacy ex opere operato, there was brought about a different and more far-reaching intrusion of the physical into the sphere of the religious.

The sacrament of Extreme Unction is first mentioned by name as one of the seven sacraments of the church in the twelfth century. It was fully discussed by the schoolmen, and received authoritative definition in the decree of the Council of Trent, which declares that holy unction of the sick was established as a sacrament by Christ our Lord, "implied (insinuat) in Mark, and commended and promulgated to the faithful by James the Apostle and brother of the Lord" (Sess. xiv, Doctrina de sacr. extr. unct. cap. 1). Since that time such a view as that of Cardinal Cajetan, that James does not refer to the sacramental anointing of extreme unction ("nec ex verbis nec ex effectu verba hæc loquuntur de sacramentali unctione extremæ unctionis," Comment. in ep. S. Jacobi, dated 1539), has been illegal in the Roman church.

In the Greek church the mystery of anointing (ἐχέλαιον) has retained in part its original purpose as a therapeutic process, and is administered to the sick while there is still hope of recovery. In the Russian use the recovery to health is the chief point, with the Greeks the main emphasis is on the forgiveness of sins.

F. Kattenbusch, "Ölung," in Herzog-Hauck, PRE, 1904; F. W. Puller, The Anointing of the Sick in Scripture and Tradition, 1910; "Oil" and "Unction," in DCA.

ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ κυρίου. Belongs with ἀλείψαντες, "anointing with oil with the use of the name"; see Heitmüller, Im Namen Jesu, 1903, pp. 86 f. The use of "the name" made this anointing a partly religious act and not a merely medicinal application.

τοῦ κυρίου] B omits. This is probably an error, but on "the Name," with no genitive, cf. 3 Jn. 7, Acts 5<sup>4</sup>, Lev. 24<sup>11</sup>, 2 Clem. Rom. 13 (and Lightfoot's note), Ign. Eph. 3 (and note), Pirke Aboth, iv, 7, cf. Jas. 2<sup>7</sup>.

15. ἡ εὐχή. The prayer is the more important part of the process, but of course is not thought of as exclusively operative. Intercessory prayer was a familiar idea to Jews.

εὐχή is elsewhere in the N. T. used of a vow. In secular Greek, vow and prayer are in many cases not easily distinguished; εὐχή has there the meaning "wish" also. In the LXX it means "vow" in the vast majority of cases, but in Prov. 15<sup>1</sup>, "has the sense of "prayer." εὐχομαι is regularly used for "pray" as well as "vow."

τῆς πίστεως, cf. 1<sup>8</sup>.

σώσει, i. e. restore to health, cf. Mt. 9<sup>11</sup>, Mk. 6<sup>14</sup>, Diod. Sic. i, 82 κἄν [οἱ ἱατροὶ] ἀδυνατήσωσι σῶσαι τὸν κάμνοντα.

Some interpreters, both Protestant scholars (as von Soden) and Catholic (as Trenkle), have given this the meaning "save to eternal life," while others have tried to include both ideas. But the natural meaning of the word in this context is decisive (so, among Roman Catholics, Belser).

τὸν κάμνοντα, "the sick man," cf. ἀσθενεῖ, v. 14.

κάμνειν is common in secular Greek in this sense, but is not found in LXX nor elsewhere than here in N. T. It is used, e. g. of gout and of disease of the eyes (κάμνειν τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς), and there is no reason whatever for taking τὸν κάμνοντα to mean "the dying" (von Soden).

ἐγερεῖ. The word means "raise from the bed of sickness to health," and is a virtual repetition of σώσει; cf. 2 Kings 4<sup>21</sup>, Ps. 41<sup>10</sup>, Mk. 1<sup>21</sup>.

ὁ κύριος. If τοῦ κυρίου, v. 14, is genuine, and refers to Christ, ὁ κύριος may have the same meaning. It would be more natural that it should mean "God."

κἄν, "and if," cf. Mk. 16<sup>18</sup>, Lk. 13<sup>9</sup>, and many other passages quoted in Lex. s. v. κἄν.

ἀφεθήσεται, impersonal passive, cf. Mt. 7<sup>27</sup>, Rom. 10<sup>10</sup>, Blass-Debrunner, § 130, Gildersleeve, Syniax, § 176. This seems to refer not to general forgiveness but to the special sins in question.

The confession is by the sick, the prayer by the well for the sick. The value of confession is as an expression of penitence, and as thus furnishing ground for the others' prayers. On confession in Jewish piety, see S. Schechter, Some Aspects of Rabbinic Theology, ch. 18, and on the history of confession, see DCA, "Exomologesis," "Penitence," EB, "Confess."

ὅπως λαθῇτε refers to bodily healing, as is clearly shown by the context (cf. v. 14). The subject of λαθῇτε is "you who are prayed for." The sick persons' own prayers for themselves are not in mind.

ἐνεργουμένη, "when it is exercised," "exerted," "put forth." The meaning is: "A righteous man's praying has great effect when he prays." The participle adds but little to the sense; for more significant participles in the same construction, see 1<sup>14</sup>.

On the verb ἐνεργεῖν, see J. A. Robinson, St. Paul's Ep. to the Ephesians, pp. 241-247, Mayor, ad loc. The word is used intransitively to mean "be active," and transitively (as here) in the sense of "effect," "carry out," "do." In certain instances in Paul (notably 1 Thess. 2<sup>13</sup>, 2 Thess 2<sup>7</sup>, 2 Cor. 4<sup>13</sup>, Gal. 5<sup>6</sup>, Rom. 7<sup>6</sup>, Eph. 3<sup>20</sup>, cf. 2 Cor. 1<sup>6</sup>, Col. 1<sup>29</sup>) it is used in the passive, and the subject is an agent or power, which is "made active," "set at work," "made to work." This is a step beyond the usual meaning, but such an explanation of these instances is

The Greek commentators on James take the word as passive, in the sense "being made effective." This is thought of as accomplished either by the virtues of the one who prays or by the ensuing good conduct of him for whom the prayer is offered. Maximus Confessor, in Quaestiones ad Thalassium, 57 (Migne, vol. xc, cols. 589-592, also Cramer's Catena) offers both explanations. "Œcumenius" gives only the latter, as does Matthaei's scholiast, who writes συνεργουμένη ὑπὸ τῆς τοῦ δεομένου [i. e. the needy man's] γνώμης καὶ πράξεως. Modern commentators sometimes interpret: "when actuated by the Spirit," but it is not legitimate here to assume this altogether later use, from which the term energumen, "possessed person," comes. Others take it as meaning "made active," "energised," and so as about equivalent to ἐνεργής, "effectual," or ἐκτενής, "earnest." But the writer would hardly have desired to restrict the power of a righteous man's prayer to exceptional cases where it showed more than ordinary intensity; the sentence owes its whole force to being an unqualified statement. Moreover there is no good evidence that the word was capable of bearing this sense.

The Latin fi has frequens, vg assidua, Luther, wenn es ernstlich ist. Of the English versions Wiclif and the Rhemish follow the Vulgate with "continual"; Tyndale, the Great Bible, the Geneva version, and the Bishops' Bible follow Luther with "fervent." A.V. has the combination "effectual fervent," * while R.V. (under the influence of Lightfoot) takes the participle as middle and translates "in its working."

Vv. <sup>17</sup>, <sup>18</sup> are dependent on midrashic tradition in the following respects (cf. the similar dependence on Jewish tradition in Jas. 2<sup>23</sup> 5<sup>11</sup>):

(1) Elijah's prayer that it might not rain. 1 Kings 17<sup>1</sup> speaks only of a prophecy. The idea of a prayer was an inference from the words, "God, before whom I stand," in 1 Kings 17<sup>1</sup>; note also the prominence given to Elijah's prayer in his other great miracle, 1 Kings 17<sup>17-24</sup>, cf. 4 Ezra 7<sup>39</sup>. This embellishment followed regular Jewish methods of interpretation; e. g. the Targum to Gen. 18<sup>22</sup> 19<sup>27</sup> translates "stood" by "ministered in prayer." That Elijah procured the drought is directly stated in Ecclus. 48<sup>3</sup>.

(2) The period of "three years and six months." The same statement is made in Lk. 4<sup>25</sup> ἔτη τρία καὶ μῆνας ἕξ, and is found in Jalkut Shimoni, fol. 32, col. 2, on 1 Kings: "In the thirteenth year of Ahab there was a famine in Samaria for three years and a half" (text in Surenhusius, Βίβλος καταλλαγῆς, Amsterdam, 1713, p. 681). The O. T. basis for this midrash was 1 Kings 18<sup>1</sup> ("many days," "in the third year"). Various explanations for the precise definition of three years and six months are suggested by J. Lightfoot, Horae hebraicae on Lk. 4<sup>25</sup>, and by Surenhusius, pp. 680-682. For other Jewish estimates of the length of the drought, cf. Ruth rabba 1, 4 (Wetstein), "fourteen months," and W. Bacher, Die Agada der Tannaiten und Amoräer; Bibelstellenregister, on 1 Kings 17<sup>1</sup> 18<sup>1</sup>.

(3) V. 18 καὶ πάλιν προσηύξατο is perhaps justified by 1 Kings 18<sup>42</sup>.

ὁμοιοπαθῆς ἡμῖν, "suffering the like with us," i. e. "a man like us." This should encourage us to take the example to heart, and is perhaps occasioned by the current tendency to emphasise superhuman traits in Elijah; cf. Ecclus. 48<sup>1-22</sup> for earlier, and JE, "Elijah," for later developments in that direction.

προσευχῇ προσηύξατο, "prayed a prayer." It was the prayer

προσευχῇ throws into relief the important idea of the sentence, much as in the classical analogies γάμῳ γεγαμηκώς, "marry in true wedlock," Demosth. p. 1002, 12, or the figurative and frequent φεύγειν φυγῇ, "flee with all speed," Plato, Symp. p. 195 B, etc. These and other examples of the figura etymologica (some of which are also given in the grammars) are to be found, together with valuable distinctions and classifications, in Lobeck, Paralipomena grammaticae graecae, 1837, pp. 523-527. Speaking of the LXX idiom, which he does not, however, trace to its source in the Hebrew infinitive absolute, Lobeck says, "haud aliena illa ab emphasis ratione, sed aliena tamen a Graecorum graecensium consuetudine," that is (J. H. Moulton), they are "possible, but unidiomatic" expressions.

In the LXX the idiom is much overworked, having been one of several convenient methods of representing the Hebrew infinitive absolute; cf. Gen. 2<sup>17</sup> θανάτῳ ἀποθανεῖσθαι, Gen. 31<sup>30</sup> ἐπιθυμίᾳ ἐπιθυμήσεις (so Lk. 22<sup>14</sup>), etc., etc. Such a case as Jn. 3<sup>30</sup> χαρὰ χαίρει is to be regarded as imitative. Acts 5<sup>28</sup> παραγγεῖλας παρηγγεῖλαμεν is probably a translation from Aramaic.

See Blass-Debrunner, § 198, Buttmann, § 133. 22, Winer, § 4, § 44, Rem. 3, § 54. 3, J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 75 f.

It may well be that James's phrase is directly or indirectly affected by this familiar Biblical idiom, but the A.V. "prayed earnestly," R.V. "prayed fervently," although they would be legitimate translations of a corresponding Hebrew phrase, introduce into this Greek verse what is not properly to be found there.

The infinitive with τοῦ, like other expressions of purpose (cf. Phil. 1<sup>9</sup> προσεύχομαι ἵνα), is often, as here, reduced to the force of an object clause. Cf. 1 Kings 1<sup>25</sup>, Is. 5<sup>8</sup>, Acts 15<sup>20</sup>. See J. H. Moulton, Prolegomena, pp. 216-218, Blass-Debrunner, § 400, Winer, § 44. 4, Buttmann, § 140. 16.

ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, "on the earth," cf. Lk. 4<sup>25</sup> ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν, Gen. 7<sup>12</sup> (of the flood) ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, 1 Kings 18<sup>1</sup> ἐπὶ πρόσωπον τῆς γῆς.

severe drought to an end, cf. Jos. Antiq. xiv, 2<sup>1</sup>, in the case of Onias, δικαίως καὶ θεοφιλῆς, and Epiphanius, Hær. lviii (lxxviii), 14, in a story of James himself.

This seems to be a general appeal, equally related to all the preceding discussions of specific tendencies and dangers. As such, it forms a fitting conclusion and gives the motive of the whole tract.

With this conclusion Spitta well compares that of Ecclus. 51<sup>m</sup>.

The figurative use of "wander" and "cause to wander," with reference to "erring from truth and righteousness," is common in the O. T. especially in the prophets and Wisdom-literature. Cf. Wisd. 5<sup>1</sup> ἐκ-
λανημένα. In Test. XII Patr. the evil spirits are called πνεύματα τῆς πλάνης, and Beliar, their chief, is ὁ ἀρχὼν τῆς πλάνης, cf. Charles's

"The truth" is here the whole code of religious knowledge and moral precept accessible to the members of the Christian church. To err from it means any departure from the right path in thought or conduct. Various examples of such erring have occupied the attention of the writer throughout his epistles; here, however, grave sin (v. 20) seems to be chiefly in his mind.

The use of ἡ ἀλήθεια in this comprehensive sense is not founded on the O. T. נִצָּחַת, נִצְרוֹת, which ordinarily mean "stability," "faithfulness," or else "conformity to fact," while in many cases in the O. T. "truth" is hardly to be distinguished from practical "righteousness,"

See Cremer, Wörterbuch der neuest. Gräcilist. 1902, s. v. ἀλήθεια, Wendt, "Der Gebrauch der Wörter ἀλήθεια, ἀληθής und ἀληθινός im Neuen Testament," in Studien und Kritiken, 1883, pp. 511-547; V. H. Stanton, "Truth," in HDB.

The norm of departure and return is sufficiently shown by the context; there is here no necessary indication that the word itself had already acquired the technical religious meaning of the modern verb "convert," although such passages as Mt. 13<sup>11</sup> (Is. 6<sup>10</sup>), Lk. 1<sup>11</sup> 22<sup>11</sup>, Acts 3<sup>11</sup> 14<sup>11</sup>, 1 Thess. 1<sup>1</sup> show that that process had already begun. See Mal. 2<sup>1</sup>, Dan. 12<sup>1</sup>, Ecclus. 18<sup>11</sup>, Ezek. 34<sup>1</sup> (Cod. A), Polyc. Phil. 6, Apost. Const. ii, 6, cf. 1 Pet. 2<sup>11</sup>.

The sense "turn back," which the word seems to have here, is not wholly foreign to Greek usage (cf. Hippocr. 135 E, of a fever, "recur"), but it is rare, while in the LXX, following 21<sup>1</sup>, that sense is very common. Cf. Mt. 12<sup>11</sup>.

γινώσκετε 8ci] B 69 1518 syr<sup>hah</sup>.

γινώσκω and γινώσκετε, the latter might have arisen from an attempt to eliminate the hard question, necessarily present with the reading γινώσκω, as to who (the converter or the converted) was the subject of the verb. The address ἀδελφοί justified the change to the unambiguous, but colourless, γινώσκετε. On the other hand, it is unlikely that the influence of τις should have led to the change from the wholly unobjectionable γινώσκετε to γινώσκω. The reading of N is accordingly the "harder" reading, and to be preferred. This is one of the rare instances of an emended reading in B.

See P. Corsen, Göttingische gelehrte Anzeiger, 1893, p. 585, B. Weiss, Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, vol. xxxvii, 1894, pp. 439-440.

ἐκ πλάνης ὁδοῦ αὐτοῦ, "from the error of his way," cf. 1 Jn. 4<sup>o</sup> for contrast of ἀλήθεια and πλάνη.

σώσει] For this reading (supported by all Greek witnesses, and by vg<sup>am</sup> in Ambrst Cassiodor) ff with certain Vulgate Mss and Orig<sup>la</sup> reads salvat.

ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ, i. e. the erring brother's soul, cf. 1<sup>21</sup> and note.

In the same connection it is to be noticed that B ff read ἐκ θανάτου αὐτοῦ for the ἐκ θανάτου of nearly all other witnesses. In both cases the shorter reading is to be preferred.

ἐκ θανάτου. The force of the sentence depends on this word, which expresses the seriousness of the situation when a man wanders from the truth, a seriousness which may easily be overlooked and forgotten. This sentence is no platitude, provided θανάτου receives its proper emphasis. On θανάτου, cf. 1<sup>16</sup> and 3<sup>o</sup> γεέννης. Note how here, as in 1<sup>16</sup>, death is the result of sin.

καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμαρτιῶν. καλύπτειν in connection with sins usually means "cause them to be forgotten," "procure pardon," and that is the meaning here. Cf. Ps. 32<sup>14</sup>. 85<sup>2</sup> (quoted Rom. 4<sup>7</sup>), Neh. 4<sup>6</sup>, Ep. ad Diogn. 9.

ἁμαρτιῶν means the sins of the converter (so Roman Catholic commentators and some others); to refer it to the sins of the converted person, as many do, makes a bad anticlimax. See Origen, Hom. in Levit. ii, 5 where converting a sinner is included as one method of securing forgiveness of one's own sins.

Cf. Sohar 92. 18, "Great is the reward of him who leads back sinners to the way of the Lord," 2 Clem. Rom. 15 μισθὸς γὰρ οὐκ ἔστιν μικρὸς πλανωμένην ψυχὴν καὶ ἀπολλυμένην ἀποστρέψαι εἰς τὸ σωθῆναι, Pistis Sophia, ch. 104, Pirke Aboth, v, 26, "Whosoever makes the many righteous, sin prevails not over him."

1 Pet. 4<sup>a</sup> has a closely similar sentence, ἀγάπη καλύπτει πλῆθος ἁμαρτιῶν, introduced as if a familiar aphorism. It is also found in Clem. Rom. 49, 2 Clem. Rom. 16. See Lightfoot's notes on both passages.

Both 1 Peter and James are usually held to be dependent on the Hebrew of Prov. 10<sup>12</sup>, "Hatred stirs up strife, but Love hides all transgressions" (Toy). There, however, the sense is not exactly "forgive" (as in the above-mentioned passages from the Psalms, etc.), but rather "hide," "turn attention away from," other men's sins, as kindly feeling would suggest, cf. 1 Cor. 13<sup>a</sup>.

Similar is the meaning in the rabbinical passages quoted by Wetstein, where it is a question of keeping quiet about another's sin, of refraining from gossip, not of forgiveness. So Prov. 17<sup>a</sup> ὅς κρύπτει ἀδικήματα ζῆται φίλιν.

Moreover, the LXX of Prov. 10<sup>12</sup> (πάντας δὲ τοὺς μὴ φιλονεικοῦντας καλύπτει φίλια) is wholly unlike the N. T. passages, and the resemblance of James to even the Hebrew text is too slight to justify the idea of direct influence upon him from that source. The sentence in 1 Pet. 4<sup>a</sup> may possibly have been influenced by Proverbs, but it is more likely that some familiar Greek aphorism (all the associations of which can no longer be traced) has been used by 1 Peter, while a part of the same form of words has been independently used, in a very different sense, by James.

See Lightfoot on Clem. Rom. 49 and 2 Clem. Rom. 16, Resch, Agrapha, pp. 248 f., Ropes, Die Sprüche Jesu die in den kanonischen Evangelien nicht überliefert sind, pp. 75 f.
